JUNEAU, Alaska (AP) — A bill calling for a federal study of safeguards needed to protect Alaskan waters and lands from damage by Canadian commodities being shipped over them was introduced in the Alaska house Tuesday.

In Ottawa today, Esquimalt-Saanich MP David Anderson called the move an effort to retaliate against Canadian objections to the Alaska Cherry Point oil tanker proposal but added he was pleased that Alaska is aware that oil pollution is a serious hazard. (See page 2)

Canadian Dollar Rises Above U.S.

The U.S. dollar today was quoted for the second consecutive day below parity on the eastern foreign exchange markets, but still cost more to convert locally from Canadian funds.

At least four of the chartered banks — led by the Royal Bank and Bank of Montreal — were quoting the U.S. dollar at discount bid price, the first such quotes since Canada's currency was pegged at 92½ cents in 1962.

At the same time, the Bank of B.C. was buying at par and selling at a slight premium. The cost of buying U.S. dollars with Canadian dollars was generally 1 per cent today.

B.C. Education A Rudderless Ship—Socred

By BRUCE YEMEN and PETER McNELLY

MLAs from all parties expressed disappointment in the legislature Tuesday at the reluctance of Education Minister Donald Brothers to engage them in a debate on education philosophy.

Robert Wenman (SC-Delta) joined opposition MLAs in pressing Brothers for a statement about the aims of the education system in B.C.

Wenman described B.C.'s education system as a rudderless ship" and added:

"Somehow, somewhere, take the rudder of that ship before it sinks in chaos," he said.

'No-Philosophy Philosophy?'

"I wonder who is the educational leader in this province?" he said, adding, "I know the minister is in charge of administration."

Wenman said the minister should say whether the government has a "no-philosophy philosophy" in which the "grass-roots" are left to decide the goals.

"Personally I don't think that is adequate in today's society," he said.

"We have to somehow prepare our young people to survive in the society that we have created," he said.

Brothers replied later that the government's philosophy involves taking education "to the people" by creating educational facilities throughout the province.

Later, reading from a piece of paper, Brothers said his philosophy of education involves the teaching of "moral concepts," the principle of "individual freedom," the encouragement of creativity and the making of contributions to society.

Allan Williams (I-West Vancouver-Howe Sound) said Brothers' "printed" philosophy wasn't understood by anyone else and he doubted Brothers himself had understood it.

Withstood 'Three-Year Assault'

"It's a credit to the public school system we have that it has been able to withstand the assault of this minister for the past three years," Williams said.

On another issue, Brothers was replying to Gordons (I-Vancouver-Point Grey) who said not enough is being done to instruct young people in what can be done to preserve the environment and to create an awareness that pollution dangers are reaching the "last chance" stage.

Gordons asked for courses in environmental control teaching in the schools, because it is already part of the science program.

PARTY REVOLTS AGAINST PM

Gorton Votes Himself Out

"slightly arrogant, impulsive one-man-band style of leadership." (Background stories, Page 35.)

The crisis came to a head after former defence minister Malcolm Fraser quit his post Monday in a row with Gorton over Vietnam policy and the handling of his army generals.

Gorton was sworn in by Gov. Gen. Sir Paul Hasluck at a brief ceremony later in the day.

The decision followed a three-hour party meeting at which Gorton, a 51-year-old former fighter pilot, faced a motion of no-confidence.

A secret-ballot was held and tied 33 to 33, without Gorton's vote. He then declared he no longer had the support of the party and cast his vote against himself to make it 34 to 33. Gorton had been prime minister for three years.

Gorton's downfall resulted from steadily growing dissatisfaction within the Liberal party with the way he handled his cabinet and the party, what a Sydney newspaper in 1969 described as his Gorton was sworn in as defence minister today, replacing Fraser.

Gorton said he would consult with Industry Minister Douglas Anthony, leader of the Country party about forming a new coalition cabinet.

Gorton said he planned major changes in policy for Australia. In particular, he said, he will review the policies on the economy, tariffs and trade and the financial relationships between the Australian states and the federal government.

Gorton was reminded of the traditional antipathy between himself and Gorton, who was elected deputy leader of the party at the meeting that saw him ousted as leader.

The resolution, by Rep. Red Swanson (D-Nenana), states that "in recent days various members of the Canadian Parliament have issued statements of protest regarding the transport of Alaskan oil via tanker from Valdez to the Puget Sound area."

It adds that "Canada itself, each and every month, has at least six carriers plying the inside passage to Skagway, all of which carry oil and oil products."

Canadians are currently shipping on a regular basis oil by tanker cars on the White Pass and Yukon Railroad and also by pipeline out of Skagway," the bill said.

The resolution states that "some of the Canadian ships currently in service from Vancouver to Skagway are some of the oldest ships still used on a regular basis," and "if an accident should occur for whatever reason, Alaskan waters would be in grave danger of being contaminated or destroyed by oil or ore cargoes."

The resolution calls for the federal government to begin a study of safeguards needed to protect Alaskan waters and land "from damage that could result from our current stance of letting the Canadians transport oil and ore over our land and through our water and to make recommendations as to an action that may be necessary to ensure our waters and land are safe from pollution of every sort."

Tax Paper Sting Pulled—Benson

Times Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA — Finance Minister Edgar Benson Tuesday night tried to placate an intensifying last-ditch effort by taxation white paper critics.

He departed from his text during a speech to the Kingston Junior Chamber of Commerce to assure his audience that the bill he puts to Parliament will not be an exact copy of the white paper.

He said it will have a "broader appeal" than has been apparent from the violent reaction of the business community and he suggested critics may be mollified when they see the legislation.

Benson said the bill will be introduced "sometime this spring" probably by the end of April.

The ad lib remarks inserted into a speech on inflation patterns was seen as an effort to stem a sudden resurgence of lobbying against the white paper reforms.

For instance, last week the Canadian Petroleum Association made a "further and final submission" to Benson concentrating its fire against the cutback in depletion trade-offs proposed by the tax reform paper.

IF CROSSES CANADA

Battle Looms On Pipeline

By DAVE McINTOSH

OTTAWA (CP) — Is another great pipeline debate in the making?

A lot of people on Parliament Hill say they think so.

Many of the ingredients that were present in the epic parliamentary pipeline clash of 1956 are visible now, they say: such as American ownership.

Danger to the Environment

And there is the rich new ingredient of possible danger to the environment.

It all could add up to the greatest confrontation since 1956 when the then Liberal government used closure to push through legislation providing a federal loan to American financiers Texas buccaneers, the Opposition called them, to complete a pipeline across Northern Ontario.

The Liberals reaped the political whirlwind the next year and Conservative John Diefenbaker became prime minister.

The current situation is that the federal government has made a proposal—Prime Minister Trudeau's "word" that United States interests move their oil from the North Slope of Alaska to mid-continent by using a route down the Mackenzie River Valley in the Northwest Territories.

The Liberals reaped the

Pipeline Corridor Possible

Northern Development Minister Jean Chretien said in a speech at Dallas, Tex., Tuesday that Canada welcomes foreign capital for further economic development.

Mr. Chretien told the Commons Friday it would be possible to establish pipeline corridor through the Arctic without hurting the interests of the Indians and Eskimos.

It is taken for granted here that the major part of the estimated $1.5 billion required for a Mackenzie Valley pipeline would come from the U.S.

This raises again the issue of American ownership and control, on which the cabinet has not yet formed an announced policy.

There is also the environmental issue on which the government has expressed strong views—but in relation to oil spills at sea and not into the land or rivers.

Canada and the U.S. are soon to hold formal discussions on a proposal by U.S. oilmen to move oil across Alaska by pipeline from the North Slope and then by giant tanker to Bellingham, Wash.

External Affairs Minister Mitchell Sharp has said sea shipments pose "great risks."

Labor Mounts Attack

The B.C. Federation of Labor has called a special closed convention in Vancouver March 26 "in preparation for a possible all-out attack by the government against the labor movement."

The decision became known today as affiliated unions representing 146,000 workers received a call to attend the special convention.

With the recent moves by the government ordering the Teamsters Union back to work and in proposing legislation that will take away the teachers union-shop provision, it was the feeling of the federation executive that we must convene this convention in preparation for a possible all-out attack by the government against the labor movement," federation secretary Ray Haynes said in a letter to unions.

China signed a supplementary aid agreement with North Vietnam last month, but its details were not revealed.

The promise of more aid, made by Chinese Premier Chou En-lai during his four-day visit to Hanoi, was contained in a joint communiqué signed at the end of the trip.

Alaska Cites Tanker Hazard

Times Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA — An Alaskan resolution calling for protection of her land and waters from pollution by Canadian oil tankers represents "fundamental agreement with our position," MP David Anderson said today.

"I'm very pleased that the Alaskans are finally paying attention to the possibilities of tanker pollution and I'm delighted they are ready to treat it as a potential problem," said the member for Esquimalt-Saanich, chairman of the Commons' environmental pollution committee.

"It seemed for a long time that Alaskans couldn't care less about possible coastal pollution."

INTERNATIONAL ISSUE

Anderson won wide publicity and the enmity of Trans-Alaska Pipeline System advocates when he turned the west coast tanker route into a major international issue.

The Alaskan state resolution doubtless is an effort to retaliate against Canadian objections to the Valdez-Cherry Point tanker shipment proposal but Anderson said it also creates a bridge for mutual discussion of the general problem.

Canadian regulations for controlling the tanker hazard in our waters and fixing cleanup liability on ship owners has just completed review by my committee and is now before parliament," Anderson said.

"These regulations are the toughest in the world but if the Alaskans want to have Washington improve on them, I say go to it. We can only all

"If the Alaskans claims about the Canadian tankers as hazards now are correct I hope they will provide some evidence."

"I think we should stop them if that's the case, but I suspect it isn't because our ships must pass rigorous Canada Steamship regulations and mere age doesn't make them hazardous."

There was no comment available immediately from either Energy, Mines and Resources Minister J. J. Greene's office or the external affairs department about the Alaska state resolution.

U.S. state secretary William Rogers has agreed to meet External Affairs Minister Mitchell Sharp after the latter returns from his current tour of Africa. They will discuss primarily the potential hazards of coastal pollution by oil tankers.

PIPE DEBATE

and dangers to the British Columbia coast.

He has been supported by an all-party group of 18 MPs who have told the U.S. interior department that an ominous procession of tankers from Valdez, Alaska, to Washington state would sooner or later result in an oil spill disaster.

Canadian regulations for controlling the tanker hazard in our waters and fixing cleanup liability on ship owners has just completed review by my committee and is now federal departments are studying thoroughly the possible environmental threat of pipelines running through Canada.

For this and other reasons a decision does not appear imminent.

For one thing, as Mr. Sharp has said, any pipeline application by an American company or consortium of companies would have to go before the National Energy Board, which would hold public hearings on it.

Consequently, there is likely to be long debate inside and outside Parliament.

By apparent coincidence, the U.S. has just agreed to discuss paying part of the costs of an improved Alaska Highway.

"A decision adverse to the (trans-Alaska) pipeline would leave us in a position of looking at the problems of alternative routes free of any prejudice."

A little later, he said: "I am sure that the national interests of Canada and of the United States would be best served if a decision were made not to build the trans-Alaska pipeline system and then go down the Pacific coast to Bellingham (by sea)."

FORECASTS BARGAINING

The following day Mr. Sharp indicated that bargaining with the U.S. for a Mackenzie route will begin fairly soon.

"I hope we will have to give up as little as possible," he said.

Up to now, the Conservatives have not taken a clearly defined position on the pipeline issue, partly on the grounds that a government policy is not clear.

But Mr. Chretien's Dallas speech appears to make it plain the government would welcome a huge U.S. investment in a Mackenzie Valley pipeline.

Still to be defined is the government's position on control of such a carrier.

NDP WILL FIGHT

The New Democratic Party has indicated that it will fight a U.S. pipeline on both American ownership and environmental grounds. Erik Nielsen, Conservative MP for the Yukon, has been insisting that the interests of Indians and Eskimos be protected.

It was the NDP, then the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation, that began the 1956 pipeline fight.

It recently has been demanding a full Commons debate before any final government pipeline decision, which would have to be made if the U.S. ditches the proposed trans-Alaska system.

Mr. Sharp, acting prime minister when Mr. Trudeau was on his honeymoon, said in the Commons there could be debate on the issue.

Mr. Sharp then left for an African trip and Works Minister Arthur Laing became acting prime minister.

LAING COMMENTS

In reply to the same question Monday, Mr. Laing said:

"I am quite certain that if a decision was taken to put down a major pipeline through Canada in the Mackenzie Valley area, the consequences would be sufficient for the government to bring the matter before the House."

Mr. Laing also said several

POLICE FRAME-UP CHARGED BY ROSE

MONTRÉAL (CP) — Paul Rose told a 12-man jury today that police falsified a statement he is alleged to have made Dec. 29, the day after his arrest in connection with the kidnapping of Pierre Laporte.

"It perfectly true that I met those policemen," he said, "but I never said the things that are in that statement."

Reef Form Urged For Breakwater

The proposed Royal Victoria Yacht Club breakwater should be built to appear as a natural reef or low rocky islet, obstructing to a minimum the view from the shore, says wildlife biologist Roy P. Finegan.

As another alternative, a breakwater serving as a pier could be built, Finegan said in a letter to Dr. K. R. Thornton, chairman of a RVYC committee investigating the possible effects the proposed rock breakwater might have on Cadboro Bay.

This type of breakwater would benefit the community at large and add a dimension to Oak Bay which is largely absent — a maritime flavor, he said.

FINISHED STONE
This would call for a breakwater constructed of finished stone, surmounted with a causeway and connected to the shore by a public access, he said.

Finegan said if a breakwater, unconnected with the shore, is constructed, it would benefit bird life, such as cormorants and guillemots.

"The area is rich in waterfowl and shorebirds," he writes. "The effect of the breakwater is likely to be a positive one..."

He noted it would also act as a shelter and feeding area for ducks and geese.

BENSON

Over the weekend, Quebec Premier Robert Bourassa announced he will produce his own white paper counter-attack on Benson's policy statement concentrating on those features which might discourage foreign investors because of the elimination of incentives.

Benson's target date for introducing the legislation has been set back several times and he's very anxious to get it out by April 30 but most insiders think it will be delayed again until mid-May.

The reason for repeated delays is simple.

The reforms will be introduced as a massive amendment of the Taxation Act — 300 pages of changes being involved in the draft bill. Legal experts are still translating the concepts into statutory language for one of the longest bills ever to be sent to Parliament.

It felt the government very likely will decide to modify sharply the white paper's proposals for putting small business into the tax liability position as proposed.

And it may also prune tax incentives for resource exploration less rigorously than originally proposed.

But it's still an odds-on bet that capital gains taxation will be introduced by the legislature — although it probably will be limited to effective rates of 25 per cent on corporations and 30 per cent on personal income.

And, despite the most vehement attacks of the entire critical barrage, there appears little doubt that the three-year tax exemption benefits enjoyed by new mining operations will be taken away.

LIBERAL LEADER Pat McGee said B.C.'s capital and operating grants to the three provincial universities have not increased in proportion to increased needs.

Because the government sets district budgets on an average of costs for all districts in the province, she said, it is impossible to achieve equality based on differences among districts.

She said that 29 of 72 school districts reporting on their budget requirements this year have indicated they will go between 110 and 170 per cent of the provincial allotment.

Mrs. Daily also asked Brothers to state the government's policy on experimental programs — a new curriculum changes in B.C. schools.

Brothers said United States educators have told him that new programs take seven years to reveal themselves as successes or failures.

STUDENT SUFFERS
If the program is bad, as has been the new math for average students, Brothers said, the student has had to suffer through it.

David Brousseau (L-North Vancouver-Capilano) also attacked the finance formula, saying large districts with few students and high operating costs are disadvantaged.

Brousseau said a five-year plan at every level of education are needed for proper financing, and he proposed more technical courses at the B.C. Institute of Technology.

For better lag time and reduced construction costs, the government should consider multi-purpose construction at school sites, he said.

Old Home Eyed
WINNIPEG (CP) — The Manitoba Historical Society announced Tuesday it will sign an agreement with Lakeview Development Ltd. to buy a home in downtown Winnipeg that once belonged to the son of Canada's first prime minister, Sir Hugh John McDonald.

UIC CHANGES OUTLINED

OTTAWA (CP) — The Commons gave first reading today to a bill incorporating the major reforms proposed last year in the government's white paper on unemployment insurance.

Introduced by Labor Minister Bryce Mackay, the bill shortens to eight weeks from 20 the period a jobless worker must have been employed to qualify for benefits.

The bill would also raise the maximum benefit to $100 a week from $57 for an unemployed worker with a family.

In addition, as recommended by the Commons labor committee which studied the white paper, the bill sets a minimum benefit payment of $20 weekly. Further, any claimant who earned less than $50 a week would receive 75 per cent of his income throughout the benefit period.

The new benefit rates were to be introduced in stages between June 27 and the end of the year.

Schools Becoming Museums—Williams

By PETER McNELLY

An NDP backbencher told the legislature Tuesday to begin an end to traditional public education by dismantling the secondary school system.

Bob Williams (NDP—Vancouver East) said education has become too costly because public schools try to do too many things, yet fail to fill human and social needs.

Williams launched a broad, philosophical attack against traditional schooling as most MLAs sat in silent, unbelieving attention.

"I think the time has definitely come for an end to compulsory schooling as we know it. At the very least we should consider dismantling of the high schools," he said.

First step in the process would be to reduce drastically the length of the school year, Williams said. Students should be allowed to get much of their education outside the classroom.

Young people should spend time in newspaper offices, engineering firms, municipal halls, libraries and museums. Williams said, "citing just a few ways that an 'open, liberal atmosphere' could be created for learning."

He said the drop-out rate in large United States cities has become so high, that this alone will bring down traditional methods of education.

"The question may not be why are so many dropping out, but why are so many staying in the system we have."

Williams said the high rate of drop-outs indicates that schools are becoming museum pieces.

He said that public schooling does not give equality to everyone, but instead educates elite groups at the expense of all taxpayers.

WEAKNESS

Other weaknesses in the school system, he said, are its competitiveness, rigidity and authoritarianism. Williams said today's schools are trying to be guardians, counselors, curriculum managers and babysitters.

That's why education costs so much today, he said.

"The next great step in education may be centred about fighting the free public school in the name of equality."

Williams quoted a study which indicated only 15 per cent of high school students are academically talented in the ordinary sense.

Perhaps people ought to go to school only two months out of the year for a period of 20 to 30 years, he said, as most Socred MLAs laughed.

"I know that many members from this house, especially the minister from Kamloops (Rehabilitation Minister Phil Gagliardi), may well consider these ideas 'wild and radical,'" Williams said.

But he predicted education will be moving in the direction he outlined within the next 10 years.

WALKS OUT

At one point during Williams speech, Garde Gardom (L-V Vancouver-Point Grey) laughed, shook his head, then walked out of the house to mid desk-thumping from the Socreds.

But Williams persisted, saying that education has become a new religion as organized religion has declined.

"In our society, mother church has been replaced by alma mater."

Despite this development, Williams said he was convinced society is entering a new religious era emphasizing new life styles and the relation of man to his land.

Immediately after his speech, Minister Without Portfolio Grace McCarthy rose, because, she said, she just couldn't let his remarks pass without comment.

She said she was sure most members would have liked to walk out of the house as Gardom did. She added that Williams speech was not only wild and radical but "woolly and ridiculous."

GET OUT

Education Minister Donald Brothers said Williams ought to "get out and see what's going on in education in British Columbia."

He said 200,000 adults are continuing their education in night schools in B.C. and the province has the highest retention rate in Canada as far as drop-outs go.

Brothers added that a B.C. Teachers' Federation survey showed that 50 per cent of the province's teachers have less than six years' experience, indicating a trend to young ideas in the schools.

In this three years as education minister, Brothers said, seven junior colleges have been opened, colleges might be introduced "within several weeks."

Revisions Coming

REGINA (CP) — Otto Lang, minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, said Tuesday final revisions of federal Prairie grains proposals should be completed within the next two weeks. He told a farm forum he expects legislation on the proposals might be introduced "within several weeks."

Anderson also said he agreed with Leir's views that the militia and reserve forces should be substantially revised.

VIETNAM WAR ENDING Nixon Quoted as Saying

NEW YORK (AP) — The New York Times published an interview today with President Nixon quoting him as saying the Vietnam war is ending. "In fact, I seriously doubt if we will ever have another war. This is probably the very last one."

Times columnist C. L. Sulzberger reported that the president stressed that the United States must maintain its responsibilities in the world, warning against a course that is described as neo-isolationism.

Sulzberger's rare on-the-record interview with Nixon took place Monday in the president's private office in the Executive Office Building across from the White House in Washington.

The Times gave this account:

"I'd like to see us not end the Vietnamese war foolishly and find ourselves all alone in the world," Nixon said. "I could have chosen that course my very first day in office."

"But I want the American people to be able to be led by me, or by my successor."

its efforts to maintain an adequate defence force—or that day, this will become a very unsafe world to live in," said Nixon.

The president described the Vietnam conflict as "exceedingly difficult for people to understand and a war where there are no heroes, no goats." But he recounted having told Israeli Premier Golda Meir:

"If America winds up the war in Vietnam in up and an image is developed that war was fought only by stupid scoundrels, there would be a wave of isolationism. This would embrace the U.S. role everywhere—including the Middle East."

The president stressed a desire to continue negotiations with the Soviet Union and "open the door of co-operation to Peking" so that "there will be a chance of building a world that is relatively peaceful."

"I deliberately say relatively peaceful. That doesn't mean everyone will be disarmed, safe and loving everyone else."

Too Much Left to Edit

IN HIS BILL TO CONTROL THE manufacture, processing and sale of what he terms "synthetic food products," Agriculture Minister Shelford appears to be anticipating the Brave New World. It is clear that as scientific technology progresses in the creation and production of synthetic foods, there will have to be some form of regulation for the protection of the consumer, just as we have such laws to regulate what we know as natural foods.

There should be adequate consumer protection against the use of harmful substances in synthetic foods; there should equally be protection against "foods" made from substances totally lacking in food values of any kind, since these, if not recognized by the consumer, could deprive him of nourishment which he might suppose he was receiving.

And synthetic foods should not be permitted in forms which appear as fake copies of known natural foods. In other words, the consumer should always be fully aware, through clear identification, of what he is getting for his money, and what he is putting into his mouth. Much of this protection is to be found in federal legislation which requires purity, identifiable packaging and adequate content description.

The achievements of laboratories today are already indicating the trend of the future. With substances being broken down to their molecules, the way is open to reconstruct them to form nourishing substances which may be closely akin to natural foods with which we are familiar. And from that point we launch into a future world of plankton, ersatz foods and test-tube creations of unimaginable variety. But let us not rush it.

Even possessing such a product for sale could result in a $500 fine, and so could refusal to let an inspector see or remove a sample. The possibilities of oppressive use of the regulation are obvious, for more and more synthetic foods are being devised and it would be difficult to define many of them. Only official approval of a product will make it legal, and the likelihood of many arbitrary decisions must be recognized:

The excesses of the proposed legislation, however, should not be permitted to obscure certain protections for the consumer which will become more important in the coming years. In so far as Mr. Shelford is attempting to set up such protection he is on the right track. But at this stage of evolution he appears to be going too far.

Pioneer in Bilingualism

THE DELICATE TASK OF ENDURING the bilingual language rights of citizens in their contacts with federal departments, agencies, and Crown corporations located in Ottawa, at head offices elsewhere and in specially designated bilingual districts in Canada, is in the charge of Mr. Keith Spicer, the federal commissioner of official languages. He has shown remarkable aptitude in his novel position in the federal bureaucracy. He and his staff deal with the complaints of irate citizens who feel offended because they cannot communicate with their national government in their choice of French or English. And they also initiate investigations of the public service to see where the status of French or English can be improved.

Mr. Spicer is well aware that the nature of his job is to ensure compliance with the "spirit and intent" of the Official Languages Act of 1969 rather than to enforce an impossible standard of facility in both official languages by all federal civil servants working in bilingual areas. He sees the use of French as a working language in the civil service as a long-range goal. He realizes the importance of common sense in implementing the 1969 Act and says quite forthrightly: "You've got to use your bloody head as well as your bleeding heart."

As the man appointed to advance the federal government's crucial policies on bilingualism in the effort to promote national unity Mr. Spicer's opinions carry weight. He sees himself engaged in encouraging a "civilized dialogue" between English-speaking and French-speaking Canadians and he warns Canadians that, in his view, there are only three or four years left in which to demonstrate that this civilized dialogue is possible. Failing that, learning a second official language would lose its appeal.

Mr. Spicer has responded to his role, so diplomatic and yet so ponderous, with appropriate actions. As the man empowered to explore the limits of bilingualism he is much more than a friendly ombudsman — he is a Canadian pioneer in an area of national peril and national promise.

Legacy of Laughter

THE NAME CAN MEAN LITTLE to today's children and not much more to their parents, but for a slightly older generation the death this week of Harold Lloyd revives memories of a silent moving picture era in which screen comedy was as wholesome as a sunny day. The man with the horn-rimmed spectacles cut his niche in public favor almost half a century ago — he had retired to all intents and purposes by 1938.

His pictures were simple, impossible, and crammed with hilarity in those times when Friday night was family night at the show and no one came away blushing. Across the screen of a less sophisticated day he scrambled from one physical crisis to another in comedy that was almost entirely situational.

At 77 he had long outlived his times in the entertainment industry, but for older people his legacy lingers — light-hearted, explosive laughter and the conventional happy ending.

FROM CALGARY

Clouds Gathering Around the Moonlighters

IN addition to all the other disabilities, these are turning out to be tough times for moonlighters. The city of Calgary has just blown its whistle on employees who take extra jobs.

Gray

The civic unions have reacted by organizing a campaign to convince the employees they should refuse to answer questions about extra earnings for jobs they do on their own time. The city of St. Boniface, Man., has gone even further. It has prohibited all its workers from taking any outside employment, period.

On this whole question of moonlighting government employees, the aldermen get on a very sticky wicket when they try to abolish the practice. Aldermen are mainly self-employed businessmen who are moonlighting on city councils. So how can a $12,000 a year businessman who picks up another $5,000 a year as spare time alderman complain when a $9,000 fireman earns an extra $3,000 carpentering rumpus rooms or shingling roofs?

The moonlighting issue, particularly with police and firemen, has been a sore one in prairie cities. It has only come to the fore, however, during recent months of high unemployment. It comes into sharpest focus when aldermen encounter qualified tradesmen on welfare because they cannot get one job while city firemen hold down two.

In an effort to use moral suasion to get its staff to ease off on outside employment, Calgary decided to require civic employees only to report outside earnings on a questionnaire. It was hoped this would help spread the word around. The vigor with which the unions reacted to the proposal indicates nothing much will be accomplished.

St. Boniface Ruling

The St. Boniface city council's prohibition against holding outside employment went into effect on March 1. From now on a condition of employment with the city will be that no outside employment will be undertaken. Those who break the rule will face immediate dismissal. Only when the present recession is overcome and shortages develop in skilled trades will St. Boniface ease up on enforcement of the new policy.

Moonlighting is one of those grey areas of economic activity in which hard facts are not easy to come by. But the concern and agitation about the problem which is taking place in all the prairie cities is indicative of the widespread nature of the practice.

Certainly there has been a great deal of extra hours employment on the part of policemen, firemen and railway workers. Many department stores now depend on moonlighters to supply the extra help needed on evenings and shopping nights. The practice has reached a point in Calgary, for example, where the moonlighters have what amounts to regular employment.

For the most part, the employees with trade skills skim the cream from the job market. Some firemen have been able to hold what amounts to two full-time jobs while they are on the night shift at the fire halls.

On the consumers' side of the equation, the moonlighters have been an unmixed blessing. Service station operators, who do not have enough business for a full-time mechanic, can use the services of moonlighters as business develops.

With union wages for all the trades now at all time highs, the service industries which employ them must now charge at least $12 an hour when they send plumbers, electricians and carpenters out on service calls. It is this level of cost which encourages householders to go looking for moonlighters.

By JAMES H. GRAY

Last year, when word got around that this correspondent was considering a basement expanding project, two city firemen and a policeman came around to inquire about the job. As they pointed out, "we are just as good carpenters as the union men and we will do the job for half what a contractor can afford to charge."

Small Business Protest

A lot of the undercover agitation against the moonlighting civic employees comes from the smaller businessmen who are the main victims of the practice. But until St. Boniface acted, few city councils had really moved against the system.

Nor, at the moment, is there much apparent pressure on working wives to quit work and let single girls have a chance. That was the big issue in the great depression of the 1930s. In those years many firms, and most governments, refused to hire married women, or let them keep their jobs after marriage. There is no sign of a return to those policies in 1971.

Correspondence From Our Readers

Save the Hilltops

A good deal has been said and written about the alienation from the public of waterfront property. I would like to draw attention to another type of alienation which seems to have passed largely unnoticed.

I refer to the alienation of hilltops. In my view private houses are already too high up Mt. Tolmie, but this is "ancient history" now and nothing much can be done about it.

Not so in other places however, and while I admire the enterprise of those taking advantage of it I think there should be an immediate move by authority to correct this situation.

If I may borrow the slogan of a well-known advertiser — "Hilltops are for people." Houses should be restricted in such places as from this moment. — H. Bridge, 3994 Shelburne.

Bus Pass Correction

I would like to correct part of a statement published in your March 15 letters column regarding the bus pass. The bus pass costs the pensioners five dollars plus the cost of a picture, money order, postage, etc., for each six months. A fresh application has to be sent in at the end of each six months. This brings the total up to about $12 per year and is of value only between the hours from 10 a.m. and 3 p.m.

As the writer of the March 5 letter stated, the service is one of the poorest, while the drivers are among the highest paid. — A. Passenger.

Fire Hall Suggestion

In the recent references to the fire department dispute and the statements of the people involved, some factors stand out that may possibly indicate a solution to the problem.

North Saanich has title to the Fire Hall buildings but acknowledges that this is the property of the community as a whole. Mayor Dear has indicated that Sidney will establish its own fire department under a fire warden's committee, taking the control out of the hands of the present joint fire committee.

Sidney already has its own fire engine and North Saanich has established a new fire hall on Wains Road off West Saanich Road, and has ordered a new, modern fire pumper and ancillary equipment.

It now appears that a very acceptable remedy could be for Sidney to establish its own fire department and fire hall, as Mayor Dear is proposing. Then, with a redistribution of some of the auxiliary equipment, we would have two independently owned units and thus eliminate the present friction.

It is suggested that the present fire hall buildings and property in Sidney, admitted by North Saanich to be the property of the whole community, those who paid for it over many years, be turned over in complete ownership to the group that so badly needs accommodation and which in fact did pay the cost; namely, the "Silver Threads," or senior members of the community.

This building, with its beautifully finished upper floor could be used now and, with a relatively small outlay, the lower area could be remodelled for additional accommodation. The building is centrally located with parking facilities. It is presently not taxable, and North Saanich, having repeatedly stated that this property is owned by all the people of the community, could hardly quarrel with the proposal that ownership be transferred to a community group of senior citizens, namely "The Silver Threads Organization" in the Sidney and North Saanich area. — A concerned citizen.

I am, however, aware that in recent years there have been some much cheaper models advertised in this field and, this leads one to suspect that this apparent protection of the public by a government appointed board would be more likely to be a tool in the hands of the hearing aid combine to close the ranks and keep out the lower priced competitors. There was the case of the dentists preventing the dental mechanics from selling dental plates directly to people at a much lower cost, and the druggists opposing the sale of generic drugs, the funeral directors trying to form a monopoly and to prevent the Memorial Society from operating at

Hearing Aid Protection

The proposed Hearing Aid Bill introduced by the Minister Without Portfolio, Mrs. Isabel Dawson, proposes to "regulate" the hearing aid business by the setting up of a board with power to issue licences and to fine or imprison unlicensed dealers, and to suspend those guilty of "misconduct or incompetence." Without a knowledge of whether there has been misconduct or incompetence, it is not easy to know whether the public is in need of this kind of protection and I am not aware that any such instances have been brought to light.

This could very well prove to be another "protection of monopoly interests" rather than a protection of the public.

If the minister is desirous of really benefiting the people who are handicapped by deafness she would be working towards an enquiry into the high costs with a view to having them brought to a more reasonable level, and pulling her weight to have these necessary hearing aids included in the medical benefits as they are in England. — Concerned Citizen.

Two Sides

May I address myself to the woman who chose to remain anonymous but didn't hesitate to direct her remarks at me, personally, in this column in reply to my letter on abortion?

There are at least two sides to every story ... whether the issue is abortion, the working conditions in the Pittsburgh coal mines, Medicare, or anything else that is in the news. We need to be given all the facts about anything before we can draw any conclusions.

For over a year now, abortion has been in the news but almost always it has been a one-sided affair. Too many questions remain unanswered.

The question of church law never entered my head when I wrote that letter ... I want answers to some very important questions ... and they have nothing whatsoever to do with church law. — (Mrs.) Elizabeth D. Brown, 473 Transit.

Supporting Jerry

In the early 1940's I was a member of the Signal Corp and was stationed and attached to the Royal Air Force unit at Patricia Bay. It was there that I first met Jerry Gosley. He was in charge of an Air Force show which was a real swinger in those days. Jerry loved Victoria and after the war returned to this city and has been part and parcel of keeping a little bit of what we have lost in the way of entertainment going.

I remember the stage shows at the Gorge Park which were enjoyed by thousands of young and old. Jerry's show is a reminder of the past and a part of the present which we cannot afford to lose. I am in no way connected with this show but feel that the Jerry Gosley Show belongs to Victoria and somehow we must see to it that it remains a Number One tourist attraction. — W. Bill Chisholm, 1278 Vista Heights.

Wrong Men

Ottawa Citizen

It is difficult to take issue with the therapeutic abortion committee at Riverside Hospital over the fact that it authorized only five abortions in the past year. Certainly the committee has been ultra-conservative in interpreting the law, which permits abortions where the health of a woman is threatened. But essentially it is the law that is wrong.

When Justice Minister Turner quotes the World Health Organization in support of that law and says the word "health" is very broad and may include physical, psychological or social health, he is stretching the word well beyond its normal definition. He is telling doctors to accept as a threat to health a condition that their consciences tell them is not a threat to health. They have a right to balk.

However, that being said, we hasten to add that the situation at Riverside Hospital is untenable. The cards are stacked against the woman who sees an abortion as a way out of her unhappy circumstances.

Because it is a public hospital, our community has a right to demand that the therapeutic committee be reconstituted with doctors whose attitudes are more in tune with those of today's society — and with Mr. Turner's overly generous reading of the law. The welfare and future happiness of members of our community have, by bad luck or design, been on the consciences of the wrong men.

'Only Way to Make Seal Hunt Humane Is to End It'

By LEWIS REGENSTEIN

(Regenstein, a U.S. government employee, is a consultant to the Committee on Humane Legislation. He wrote this article for the Washington Post.)

On Friday, with the opening of this year's Atlantic seal hunt, the slaughter of some 245,000 harp seals will begin.

Last year in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, some 50,000 seals were killed in the hunt; this year's quota has been set at 45,000.

This is only a fraction of the seals killed every year in the Canadian-Norwegian seal hunt in the Atlantic. Last year, Canada admits that "close to 300,000" seals were "harvested," although the actual figure was closer to half a million.

This year's quota has been reduced to 245,000 harp seals, since there is some concern that the once-huge herds are suffering serious depletion. There is however, no way of verifying whether this quota will be adhered to.

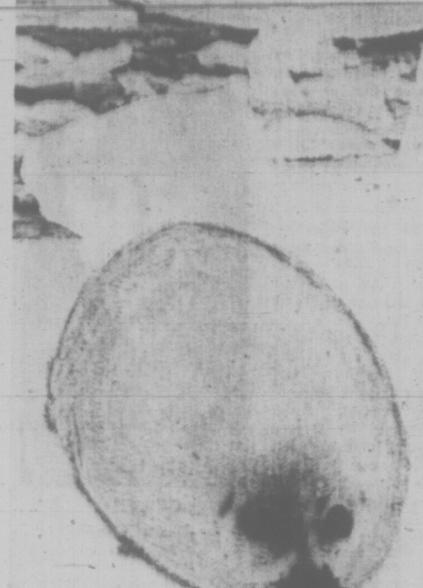

The Canadian government has responded to protests by defending both its methods and purposes. Ottawa points out that seals are not an "endangered species," and claims that if vast numbers of seals were not killed off every year, the herds would grow too big.

However, recent press releases from the Department of Fisheries and Forestry announcing the opening of the new season admit that there has been an overkill in the North Atlantic in recent years, and that the herd that arrives off Labrador each year is "seriously depleted."

Conservationists contend that there would be no real danger of overcrowding if the herd were allowed to increase to its natural size, since seals are gregarious by nature and tend to bunch together "like people at a cocktail party." Moreover, Ottawa's own figures indicate that the size of the herd has been reduced within the last 30 years from 3 to 2 million.

Canada also stresses the economic benefits of the hunt, although official figures of 1969 show that the average land hunter earned a gross

Quail Sale Top News In War-Jaded Saigon

By MARK FRANKLAND

SAIGON — South Vietnam's Army has been having a hard fight in Laos in the boldest operation it has ever undertaken, but a good many Saigonese have been much more interested these past two weeks in breeding quail.

This may sound ludicrous, but shortly after the Vietnamese troops crossed into Laos word went round Saigon that fortunes could be made from these birds, which Chinese and Vietnamese restaurants here offer as a mildly fortifying delicacy. Civil servants and school-masters on miserably small salaries bought trayfuls of chicks and slept with them by their beds.

Dirt Cheap

The price of chicks went through the ceiling and then, just as suddenly, collapsed. The personal columns of Saigon's best newspaper are today full of dirt-cheap offers of quail for sale.

There is nothing new about the indifference of many South Vietnamese to the war. They can do something about making a fortune, or just making a living, but the war, as one Vietnamese civil servant put it, "is too remote, too entirely beyond their control."

In a different country you would expect to find people with a certain pride in the new adventures of their army, but except for the generals, pro-government politicians and the senior officials, this is not generally the case here.

I talked the other day to a Vietnamese who had been invalidated out of a CIA-controlled commando team. He was furious because a South Vietnamese Army officer had told him he was "an American lackey" to let himself be employed by the CIA.

"So I asked him," the Vietnamese said, "who do you think provides your uniform, and your pay and the weapons you fight with?" It will take a lot more than talk about Vietnamization to convince the South Vietnamese that Americans do not really control the Army as they still do so many other things in this country.

This attitude has prevented many South Vietnamese from realizing how very much stronger their army has become over the last three years.

The American command was very slow — culpably slow, some senior U.S. officials think — to realize that one reason why the South Vietnamese so often fought badly was that they had worse weapons than the Viet Cong and North Vietnamese.

But even if more South Vietnamese knew that Saigon's bigger and much better-equipped army of today fights far more strongly than it used to, that would not necessarily make them like it any better.

War Sweetened

The Vietnamese Communists, with their men both in the North and South, are the only people who have so far been able to speak for a united Vietnam. The South might have developed an identity of its own but that was ruled out by the massive American presence and by Washington's decision that, far from making sacrifices for their survival, the South Vietnamese should have their war sweetened with money and Japanese consumer goods.

A lot has been talked in recent weeks about the logic of the South Vietnamese military policy: first the destruction of the Cambodian sanctuaries, then the push into Laos to cut the last lifeline between North and South, and finally an attack against the North itself.

But very little has been said about the psychological attraction for the South to conquer the North and so cure its present lack of confidence and purpose. Vice-President Ky certainly expressed something like this, when after the Laos operation began he demanded "a march on the North" so that the Vietnamese homeland might be reunited and Vietnam once more become a strong nation.

This is still too extravagant an aim for most South Vietnamese to share but at least it is an aim. It is quite certain that the Vietnamese will remain discontented with themselves, their government and their Army as long as their horizons are limited to rice cookers and quails.

(The London Observer)

President Richard Nixon wrapped up the world in several neat geographical packages in his foreign policy statement to Congress and managed to leave out only one country — Canada, the biggest trading partner of the United States and the second largest nation, geographically, in the world.

The section of the 180-page document dealing with the "Western Hemisphere" begins: "For more than a century and a half, our most consistent peacetime foreign relations were hemispheric relations. We have shared with our sister republics the experience of gaining and preserving our independence from the Old World."

So, either Canada is not in the Western Hemisphere or it is a republic.

The State Department will understand Mr. Nixon's problem of where to put Canada. The Canadian section at State comes under European affairs, and that is where the department wants to keep it rather than put Canada under the proposed new office of undersecretary of state for Western Hemisphere affairs.

At times, some of us have considered the possibility of launching an anti-publicity bureau campaign. We'd emphasize all that's unpleasant here. We'd point out that Victorians are smug, clique-ridden, unfriendly, niggardly, snobbish, backward, selfish, xenophobic — everything that's disagreeable. Instead of the welcome signs, we'd set up big posters warning about pollution of air, sea, stream, lake and countryside. Our intent would be to leave the impression on anyone who came that this was a place they wouldn't want to return to.

But a large part of our local population doesn't want to live that way. It wants to have its individual homes and individual gardens in places that are individually attractive, according to taste.

If that choice is to remain a possibility, the spread of residences will obviously continue — and it happens to be a process which has allowed this part of the world to maintain a reputation for gracious living of a sort. We haven't reached a consensus on the idea of compartmentalizing every person in his individual shoe-box in a neat stack to avoid cluttering up the landscape with homes and gardens.

We suffer here from our advantages. People come to Greater Victoria because it provides an atmosphere that attracts them. They like the climate, though why, during a miserable winter such as we've had, I don't know. And having come, they go about improving things according to their definition of improvement.

It might be relatively easy to plan huge living structures, like the futuristic design of a famous French architect, which would create a human income of only $120. These residents of the coastal areas — called landsmen — pay a dollar for a license to participate.

The ambitious hunter can kill and skin about 125 baby seals a day at about $7 per skin, though this is rare. Some conservationists have suggested that at least this much income would accrue to the inhabitants of the area if it were transformed into a seal preserve and a serious effort was made to promote tourism there during the period when the baby seals were being born and nursed.

There are numerous other sources of leather and fur trim which are made from seal pelts. The oil, which is made from the blubber and used in margarine, soap, and cosmetics, can easily be obtained also. The snow-white fur is in no sense necessary to man's welfare. By any standard, it is a luxury item.

One criticism to which the Canadian government has shown some sensitivity concerns the killing of the baby seals, especially the "white-coats" since they present a vividly pitiful spectacle as they are clubbed to death.

In response to protests over this, the Canadian government last year promised that no baby seals would be killed in the 1970 hunt. Official statements continue to make much of the claim that the opening of the hunt was postponed and whitecoats were prohibited from being taken.

However, what is left unsaid is that the authorities simply got around this prohibition by referring to 21-day old infant seals that had shed their white coats as "beaters" and these were still fair prey.

The government's announcement did, however, have its intended effect of quieting the public uproar. Furthermore, the setting back of the opening of the hunt by 10 days did not have the ostensibly desired effect. As an official brochure euphemistically states, "The gulf herd was late in whelping, and as a result, some of the animals were not as mobile as anticipated."

This year the hunt officials have dispensed altogether with this subterfuge and are openly permitting baby seals — whitecoats and beaters — to be killed.

Government literature quotes freely from numerous "expert" witnesses who defend the "humane" methods for killing the seals. Other eyewitnesses disagree.

The fisheries and forestry department's news release on the hunt's opening promises that "the same high standard of surveillance of the seal hunt will be maintained this year."

But in the final analysis, the question of the humanity of the hunt is not a real one. The hunt, by its very nature, is and must remain brutal. The only way to make it humane is to eliminate it.

Will the Canadian-Norwegian seal hunt continue this way in the years ahead? Apparently so, according to a Canadian Embassy spokesman, since there is practically no domestic opposition to the hunt except for Brian Davies and his group.

When the hunt officially ends on April 24, after some 245,000 seals have been killed, it will be only a matter of weeks before U.S. hunters get their turn.

Around July, in Alaska's Pribilof Islands, the annual "harvest" of some 60,000 adult Alaskan fur seals will begin, under the supervision of the U.S. Commerce Department.

Hunting the Origins of Life in Space

By WALTER SULLIVAN

New York Times Science Editor

complex changes." Then, he suspected, the miracle of life's origin could have taken place.

Little did Darwin suspect that a century later at least some of the prerequisites that he described would be discovered.

Such an evolution, he realized, could not take place today, for the building blocks of life — the proteins, the amino acids from which they are formed, the sugars and so forth — would either be destroyed chemically or consumed by bacteria.

"But if," he wrote to a colleague, "we could conceive of some warm little pond, with all sorts of ammonia and hydrogen, oxygen, nitrogen and carbon (methane, ammonia, water and hydrogen gas) are energized by electric sparks, they spontaneously begin to synthesize more complex molecules."

There was speculation, therefore, that the first steps toward the evolution of life's chemistry occurred on the primitive earth, when such simple compounds were subjected to various stimuli — ultraviolet light from the sun, volcanic heat, and so forth.

The first hint that such evolution may have occurred elsewhere was the discovery of meteorites rich in carbon compounds that, it had previously been believed, could only be produced in living organisms. Now the radio astronomers are discovering that great clouds of organic material exist far out in space.

How far does this process go in distant space? Are there, in fact, peculiar forms of life adrift in those dark clouds visible in our more powerful telescopes? The next step in seeking answers to such questions is to detect substances associated with intermediate steps in life's evolution — amino acids, proteins, purines and pyrimidines.

The best candidate for such discoveries is the mammoth new radio telescope nearing completion in the mountainous Eifel region in West Germany. When it goes into operation this spring it will replace the 250-foot dish at Jodrell Bank, in England, as the largest fully steerable antenna on earth. Its diameter is 328 feet.

The radio observations so far have shown that the earliest steps along the long road from the simplest organic chemistry to that of life are taking place far out in space. Such processes could help account for the carbon-rich meteorites, but so far the question of their roles in the origin of life on earth remains open.

Nixon Put Canada Into Limbo

By TERRANCE WHIS

WASHINGTON — President Richard Nixon wrapped up the world in several neat geographical packages in his foreign policy statement to Congress and managed to leave out only one country — Canada, the biggest trading partner of the United States and the second largest nation, geographically, in the world.

The section of the 180-page document dealing with the "Western Hemisphere" begins: "For more than a century and a half, our most consistent peacetime foreign relations were hemispheric relations. We have shared with our sister republics the experience of gaining and preserving our independence from the Old World."

So, either Canada is not in the Western Hemisphere or it is a republic.

The State Department will understand Mr. Nixon's problem of where to put Canada. The Canadian section at State comes under European affairs, and that is where the department wants to keep it rather than put Canada under the proposed new office of undersecretary of state for Western Hemisphere affairs.

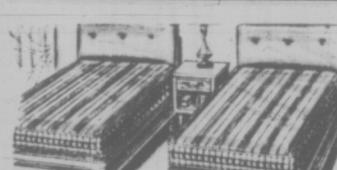

State's rationale is that Canada's interests lie more in the Atlantic community than the Western Hemisphere, even though the United States is our most important trading partner, and even though Canada is not essentially involved in many European problems.

The result is that Canada gets lost somewhere between Europe and the Western Hemisphere. Mr. Nixon's comprehensive review of his nation's foreign policy last year does not mention, much less treat, relations with Canada in the section of Europe. There is no mention of Canada in the section on the Western Hemisphere.

Canada does gain passing mention in general sections of the document on trade and environment but that is the extent of direct reference.

Just Too Many People

By ART STOTT

When some of us drive visitors to the top of Mount Tolmie for what is probably the best panoramic view of Greater Victoria, we have a tendency to look north and west before offering a familiar observation.

"When we were youngsters," we say, "we used to ride out here on our bikes, climb to the top and look out over the farmlands of Gordon Head and beyond. All that area, where housing development has taken place, used to be open fields with the occasional barn and home spaced sparsely in them."

As old-timers we miss the meadows, the geometrically spaced berry fields, where some of us made as much as six-bits a 12-hour day in the picking season. But we temper our regret for what is gone by recognizing the need for more housing in the growing region — an area carrying twice as much and more population that it did in pre-war years.

We establish the logic of public use of desirable tracts, each according to the type of location he considers desirable. With less logic, we overlook the matter of personal taste in siting homes. We haven't come up yet with a single, simple answer to reconcile the different views of various people on where and how they want to live.

We suffer here from our advantages. People come to Greater Victoria because it provides an atmosphere that attracts them. They like the climate, though why, during a miserable winter such as we've had, I don't know. And having come, they go about improving things according to their definition of improvement.

AFTER THREE YEARS of searching, Geoffrey Cumpstone, 27, of Duncan shows the rare Puget Sound box crab he caught Sunday to his two-year-old daughter Rae-Anne. Cumpstone, scuba diver and member of the Cowichan Waterbuoys, said to his knowledge only five of these crabs have been caught by club members. "For the past three years I have been combing the ocean around Cowichan for one." He found it in 80-feet of water in the Collin shoals reef at Ladysmith.

Stolen Credit Cards Financed Big Trip

DUNCAN — Ronald Alfred Bruton, 30, of Abbotsford, who financed a trip from Hope across Canada with stolen credit cards was sentenced Monday to 18 months in jail.

RCMP said Bruton was arrested by Nevada police and returned from San Francisco by American immigration officials to appear in court after breaking into the residence of Peter Oggie of Duncan in early February.

Bruton stole $200 worth of articles and Oggie's car which is now being shipped from San Francisco.

Bruton, who pleaded guilty, was sentenced to 18 months for breaking and entering, six months for theft of the car and fined $200 in default of 30 days, for possession of the stolen credit cards. All the sentences are concurrent.

Bruton was ordered to make restitution of $163 to Texaco of Canada and $50 to a Vancouver pawn shop.

Court Orders Mill Worker Reinstated

VANCOUVER (CP) — Mr. Justice Craig Munroe granted an ex-parte injunction in supreme Court Tuesday restraining MacMillan Bloedel Ltd. from firing a veteran employee, suspended last Tuesday.

The company immediately reinstated Ken Warde, a senior guard at its Harmac pulp mill near Nanaimo, and advised him to report to a midnight shift Tuesday night.

MacMillan Bloedel suspended Warde in conformity with an arbitration board ruling in favor of the Pulp and Paper Workers of Canada, which sought his dismissal after what the company described as 17 years of "good" service.

The grievance was based on Warde's refusal to join the union after the PPWC took over certification at Harmac from the International Brotherhood of Pulp, Sulphite and Paper Mill Workers.

The PPWC did not appear at the injunction hearing.

Saanich to Hire Law Students

Saanich police department will hire three law students for summer relief work, Hugh Curtis, mayor and police commission chairman, said Tuesday.

A similar program was initiated by Victoria — last summer, involving five students.

"It's a good idea from Victoria and we've decided to follow it," Curtis said.

The Victoria program aimed to improve communication between police and youth and provide street-level experience for the students.

FROM YOUTH PAPER TO 'PEOPLE'S PAPER'

By DOREEN HUNTER

Michael Griffiths of Sidney, 21-year-old underground publisher, is "between papers." He thinks his next project should be an underground "people's paper." He feels ready for it because of the experience he gained from publishing Sidney's first underground youth paper "Cobwebs and Strange" last year.

A mixed experience, he admits, but it convinced him of the need for a local communicator in the same free mode.

Underground papers fill a need in the community, Griffiths said.

Slum Doctor To Speak

Dr. James Turpin, the American doctor who has earned international recognition for his work in the slums of Hong Kong and the hills of South Vietnam, will speak at a public meeting tonight at 8 in the Student Union Building of the University of Victoria.

The meeting is being sponsored by the Victoria Junior Chamber of Commerce.

Inspired by the example of Dr. Thomas Dooley's work, Turpin, his wife and four children went to Hong Kong in 1962. Using a Chinese junk, Turpin organized a floating clinic, working among the population of 200,000, many of whom never set foot on land.

In 1964, Turpin opened a second Project Concern clinic, this time at DaMao in South Vietnam.

He also began his village medical assistant program, through which he has given three-month training courses to young people from 72 different villages.

A second hospital is soon to open at the South Vietnam village of Lien Hiep. The six-building, 50-bed hospital is a memorial by the people of Worcester, Mass., to the 150 men of their county who have died in the Vietnam war.

Project Concern activities also include administration of the medical-dental clinic and child-care centre in Tijuana. Future plans also include construction of a modern pediatric hospital in the Mexican city, and another at Baja, California.

Hammer Re-Elected

NANAIMO — Les Hammer of Port Alberni has been re-elected for a second term as president of Vancouver Island Publicity Bureau.

He started the paper to write about music but after studying about 30 underground papers and expanded to include social comment and put-down humor.

He published from the home of his parents Lorna and Courtenay Griffiths, and recruited an unpaid staff of writers from friends, pressed his sister Brenda into service as chief stapler, and produced four sold-out issues.

His goals were three-fold: "to create and open channels of communication between all the people of lower Vancouver Island, to enjoy doing it, and to make money."

Griffiths, long-haired and bearded, collected ideas and material from far and wide. Friends contributed cartoons, slogans and sketches. A lot of them wrote poetry and fillers.

His own writing, however, provided the backbone of all on his own knowledge of current hit music, rock groups and the music industry.

Editorials were aimed at fighting violence, pollution and apathy, and were strong on freedom, awareness and honesty.

The editor, by the time the third issue came out in August was ready to admit defeat on opening lines of communication.

Communication, he editorialized, was almost entirely one-way street in spite of the interest young people had in his paper.

His second goal — to enjoy

mixed experience

publishing the paper — was achieved, with a bonus.

"I learned a lot. There is a definite need for a more reader-oriented paper, with the community as focal point."

"I learned promises don't mean much and I find I can express myself better now. And there is no generation gap, just certain people who object to certain things."

Although one goal was to make money, selling copies at 30c each, the year-long venture was not exactly a financial success.

The possibility of publishing another paper under a different name and aimed at a wider cross-section of readers hinges on the availability of an offset press.

As for the sharp response to the aggressive anti-establishment tone and use of four-letter words in underground papers, Griffiths offers no apologies.

NIXON IGNORES MORATORIUM BID ON SST PLANS

By STAN BENJAMIN

WASHINGTON (AP) — Despite contentions a supersonic transport fleet might alter the world's climate, the Nixon administration brushed aside the idea of an international moratorium on SST construction without asking if other nations were interested.

Bertram Rein, deputy assistant secretary of state for transportation and telecommunications, confirmed in an interview "there has been no approach of that kind" to the Soviet Union, Britain or France which are building SSTs.

"I don't think it went that far," said Rein, "because the competent authorities, the president, had decided it was wise to proceed on our own, regardless what anyone else might do."

DISMISSES IDEA

In an environmental-impact statement issued last December, the transportation department mentioned the possibility "that production of all SSTs on a worldwide basis be halted until the environmental effects of SST flight can be explored."

But the statement dismissed the idea with the argument: "It is unlikely that at this stage production could be halted."

A Senate appropriations subcommittee is taking testimony on the Nixon administration's request for $290 million to continue development of two SST prototypes.

In a statement prepared for the subcommittee, AFL-CIO President George Meany said continuation of the SST program will create an eventual 200,000 jobs, help recover a favorable U.S. balance of trade and put the ailing aerospace industry back on its feet.

The possibility high-flying SSTs might affect the weather has been a major arguing point of opponents of the aircraft.

The transportation department's environmental-impact statement quoted a Massachusetts Institute of Technology study group's recommendation for more research on the possibility SST exhaust might increase winter cloudiness in the polar regions.

The interior department said changes in polar climate, as feared by the MIT group, could have "consequences that reach out into temperate areas because the polar areas serve as breeding grounds for much of the world's weather. . . . These potential effects growing out of a change in polar climate merit serious attention."

Labor Law Overhaul Hikes Federal Minimum Wage

OTTAWA (CP) — A legislative overhaul of federal labor law began in the Commons Tuesday with first reading of a bill seeking to improve employment conditions for more than 500,000 Canadian workers.

Key features of the bill, to amend the Canada Labor (Standards) Code, include:

—An increase to $1.75 an hour from $1.65, effective July 1, in the federal minimum wage rate, with further increases to be at the discretion of the cabinet;

—Maternity leave of 17 weeks, more if the birth is delayed, with a guarantee for the mother that her job, or a similar job, will be open for her six weeks after delivery;

FIRST IN SERIES *

—Advance notice of up to three months of mass layoffs and two weeks notice for individual workers if the employee has not himself given cause;

—A minimum of one week severance pay for workers laid off after five years with a firm.

The bill is the first in a series of legislative reforms being prepared by Labor Minister Bryce Mackasey. Notice has already been given of a second bill, to revamp Canada's unemployment insurance system, which Mr. Mackasey is expected to introduce today.

The minister suggested in an interview Tuesday that the long-awaited amendments to the Industrial Relations Disputes Investigation Act may come down within a month. He told the Commons the cabinet has still to pass on his proposed reforms of the Fair Employment Practices Act.

The amendments to the Labor (Standards) Code incorporate some of the principal findings and recommendations of the royal commission on the status of women.

royal commission on the status of women.

The bill repeals the Female Employees Equal Pay Act, criticized by the commission as ineffective, and puts the onus on the government to ensure that women workers receive as much as men for doing the same or similar work. Under the present system, Mr. Mackasey agreed, women fear reprisals if they stand up for their rights.

PROVIDES PROTECTION

Penalties for a conviction under the amendments include fines of up to $1,000 or one year in jail.

The bill also would provide protection against dismissal for employees whose wages have been or are about to be garnished.

Other measures would modify provisions in the existing code:

—Employees would be able to claim two weeks of paid vacation during their first year of employment rather than at the end.

Those leaving their jobs would be entitled to unclaimed vacation pay at a rate of four per cent of their basic pay.

—A holiday with pay would be provided on the working day immediately before or after New Year's Day, Christmas Day, Dominion Day or Remembrance Day if they fall on a Sunday or a Saturday normally a non-working day.

DIRECT EFFECT LIMITED

The labor minister would be able to set out regulations to exempt certain businesses or classes of workers from the present code's provision for a maximum 48-hour work week.

Special cabinet dispensation

now is required for exemptions.

The new amendments will affect directly the conditions only of those workers in federally-regulated industries, including railways, banking, communications and interprovincial trucking.

The federal code, however, is generally seen as the pattern for provincial legislation.

Mr. Mackasey offered the assurance that the changes "will not embarrass the provinces" and noted that Ontario and Quebec already have moved in the area of women's rights and mass layoffs.

The amendments probably will be discussed at a meeting in April by the federal minister with his provincial counterparts.

The requirement for advance notice of layoffs, Mr. Mackasey added, will enable both speedier service from the unemployment insurance commission and more effective use of the manpower department's resources for finding new jobs or arranging re-training.

Low-Lead Gas Sales Also Low

TORONTO (CP) — Sales of no-lead and low-lead gasolines introduced in Canada last year are remaining low despite recent increases in sales of new cars for which the gasolines were primarily developed.

Some older models can also use the gasolines, designed to reduce air pollution caused by automotive emissions, but the gasolines were developed mainly for 1971 models. The new cars can also use gasoline blends with lead.

The new gasoline brands are lingering at or below an average of two per cent of service station volume.

They came on the market last fall supported by costly advertising campaigns at a time when sales of new cars were slow and just prior to a 9-day strike by employees of General Motors of Canada Ltd.

However, GM's Canadian sales in February were up 9.8 per cent from January and there has been no corresponding increase in sales of the new gasoline brands.

OUTLETS LIMITED

Charles Hayles, assistant general manager, marketing for Imperial Oil Ltd., said Imperial is selling its low-lead brand in about 550 service stations in its 6,500-outlet chain.

He said poor consumer response is one of the reasons the company stopped a program in which it was planned to have 1,100 outlets for the new gasoline by the end of the year.

Imperial calls its brand Esso 2000. Sun Oil began marketing Sunocolite and Shell's no-lead product is named Shell Ultra.

Gulf Oil Canada Ltd. of Toronto had announced earlier it was blending additives into its regular and premium grade gasolines that would reduce substantially "the two largest harmful components in automotive emissions—carbon monoxide and unburned hydrocarbons."

SHELL CHARGES MORE

Esso 2000 and Sunocolite sell at the same price as regular gasoline while Shell Ultra charges a wholesale premium of 2.5 cents a gallon.

Shell Canada is selling its Ultrabrand through 700 of its 6,200 outlets.

However, "it's not proceeding quite as rapidly as initially conceived and response from the public has been slower than we'd hoped," a company spokesman said.

Sun Oil introduced Sunocolite at about 200 outlets west of Belleville, where sales represent less than two per cent of overall volume—"rather disappointing" in the words of George Brereton, the company's marketing manager.

Second Attack For Ayub Khan

KARACHI, Pakistan (AP) — Mohammed Ayub Khan, former president of Pakistan, has suffered his second heart attack in less than a year.

Doctors at Rawalpindi, where the 64-year-old field marshal was taken to hospital Tuesday, said he was out of danger but needed a complete rest. He also had a heart attack last April.

Ayub Khan took over the government in October, 1958, but was compelled to leave office in March, 1969, by student demonstrations and economic unrest.

Victoria Could Do It Too

By ELIZABETH FORBES

A plan produced by Victoria and Vancouver architectural students to save and revive our old town area has created lively interest, especially amongst those who genuinely love Victoria. It's a well-thought-out idea, reflecting concern for the old, yet giving plenty of scope for growth of new commercial and residential life. It also would prevent destruction of what could be our most precious assets — our history and our individuality as a city of charm.

Naturally, there are those who insist it is an impossible dream. As it happens, I'm not one of them. Perhaps because I've seen the same sort of idea brought to life in Montreal. And I believe if Montreal can do it, we could do it right here in Victoria.

The Montreal plan, based on recommendations of its Viger Commission, started (as ours did a few years back) with restoration around the City Hall. It moved from there to the old Bonsecour Market and square.

Then, in 1966, plans were finalized for historic Place D'Youville, to make it and the area from McGill Street, to Place Royale a functioning part of Old Montreal.

First buildings to be restored (by private developers) were a number of low stone places, with two-foot-thick walls, gabled roofs and oeil-de-boeuf windows, standing in 13 acres, roughly horseshoe shape, around three sides of a courtyard and known as the Youville Stables. (Although none of the existing buildings was ever a stable.)

This area had deteriorated to a point where Montrealers and tourists alike were loathe to walk there at any time.

When restoration was completed in 1968, Youville Stables (as it continues to be named) with other buildings adjoining it, provided 200,000 feet of rentable space, an area equal to that provided by a sleek new high-rise tower in Westmount Place. And the waiting list for residential and commercial occupancy was almost greater than the promoters could handle.

Long-range plans included the establishment of various craft shops at ground level around the old courtyard, where proprietors would demonstrate their skills as well as sell their wares.

These boutiques, with a restaurant, an inn, offices, studios and charming living quarters, were all planned with thought to restoring an old-world environment such as existed on that site 200 years ago.

Close to the renovated buildings in a wing to the chapel of a former Grey Nuns residence was still standing. When I was down there in 1968 there was a movement afoot to have the city, the order and Youville Stables Ltd., or some combination of the three, take on restoration of those historic relics.

Montreal was also considering recommendations of the commission that would see excavation of a canal to the east of The Stables to release the old-time Petit Riviere (Little River) that played an historic part in the long-ago life of Place D'Youville. Modern times saw it running through a conduit 15 feet underground.

Construction of a square on the site of the old Parliament Buildings of the two Canadas was also being considered.

The plan produced by our Victoria and Vancouver architectural students is comparable in scope to the Montreal effort.

It would preserve our individuality and charm through restoration of the old part of town. It would create quays, alleys, shops, cafes and apartments that would fit into this old-time environment.

It does not rule out high-rise towers. Rather it puts them in their proper place — away from the waterfront and north of the old town area. Do I hear someone say it is too rich for our blood? Nonsense! If Montreal could do it, we can do it too!

'Asphalt-Turning'

Beacon Hill Road to Become Grass

An official asphalt-turning will take place in Beacon Hill Park next week to mark the return of an obsolete roadbed to pure parkland.

City parks director Cliff Bate said the change from roadway to grass is part of a general plan to reorganize park traffic in which several portions of road will be removed.

Parks committee chairman Ald. Clyde Savage will remove the first chunk of asphalt at 9:30 a.m. Monday.

The road involved is a section about 100 yards long and 20 feet wide called the Upper Nursery Road, running south from the cricket pitch. All asphalt will be removed, soil placed in the hole and the area seeded to grass "and allowed to go back to the natural state," Bate said.

KEEP IT COOL

Pollution Panic Not the Answer

By Jack Scott.

My brooding about the inherent dangers of Pollution Over-Kill began one blue-and-gold day last autumn when I'd a luncheon date with six seniors at the university.

In the morning I'd done a little raking and was burning a mound of maple leaves, moving occasionally to leeward to savor the most evocative of all aromas, when two boys in their late 'teens came walking by. As they passed, one of the boys turned and said, "You're making pollution there, mister, I thought he was kidding. "Gorgeous, isn't it?" I called back. He muttered something to his companion, unsmiling, and they walked on. He had not been kidding.

My lunch with the seniors was to sample their views on an entirely different matter. As it turned out, we talked of little else but ecological doom. That was their way of putting it. It seemed almost an obsession with them. So much so, indeed, that four out of six of these bright young people had decided to remain in Victoria, rather than hurl themselves at greater cities, simply because the air is sweeter here.

When I posed the hypothetical question of whether they'd accept the challenge of launching a career, say, in New York, the answer was unanimously no. They did not choose to perish from carbon-monoxide.

Since then I've confirmed that earlier suspicion that pollution is the one blight of society, globally or locally, that most concerns the younger set. With some it's more than merely concern. There are many who see it, with stark pessimism, as an early death sentence for humanity and for themselves. They talk of the "killing" of Lake Erie or of Thor Heyerdahl's mid-ocean discovery of drifting debris, with no less apprehension than they talk of detergent foam in the Gorge or the billowing smoke from the B.C. Forest Products mill.

Jack Davis, in his new role as minister of environment, recently described this "doomsday talk" as "poppycock" and "a sort of death wish." Certainly if it is instilling the kind of Chicken Little psychosis that will keep a substantial number of young people from going out to meet the timeless challenge of the cruel, dirty old world, it obviously needs some reassessment.

It can be argued, of course, that a certain amount of hand-wringing panic was needed to bring the public to a full awareness of the very real dangers involved, that without it Davis, himself, might not now be in that worrisome role as watchdog.

Certainly one noteworthy effect has been the grass roots development of the Society for Pollution and Environmental Control. I know of no more dedicated and informed group of laymen. If over-kill has been part of SPEC's technique, too, it can hardly be faulted. I was all for the Cowichan-Malahat branch, under the admirable Kurt Hoin, when they dumped their garbage on the property of the kraft mill at Crofton on the simple theory that garbage-dumping should be a reciprocal right.

That particular mill, in full view of the Salt Spring Island retreat, has been an object lesson in how easy it is to become hung-up on industrial carelessness or irresponsibility. I can remember that slope and that bright sun before the blight came; can remember, too, the glossy public-relations handouts assuring one and all that modern techniques would prevent the mill from becoming a nuisance. I never drive by there through that obscene drench of acrid smoke without experiencing fury.

But fury and despair ought to be kept in balance, since one might so easily cancel out the other. Indeed, of all the world's problems, pollution is far and away the most vulnerable to direct, specific, cool-headed action.

It's understandable that there should be a profound sense of defeatism in the continuing stock-piling of nuclear bombs. Despite the other day by Dr. Hugh Keenleyside as the greatest continuing threat to man's survival, or in the evidence that the world's population explosion is still unchecked or that one in every three humans on this earth is hungry.

Environmental pollution, in comparison, is a sitting duck. It comes down to localized situations. It can be banished by rules that are easily policed. When it is controlled by enlightened legislation it can be vanquished. Indeed, the whole of nature in every shift of wind and tide is a kind of gigantic, global housekeeping operation ready to complete the job if we've brains enough to blow the whistle.

Jack Davis says that the ecological situation is still under control, that we can tip the balance of nature back again if we do the right thing.

If proof were needed that we're a long way short of the point of no return, the two great experiments in London are classic cases. The Thames, a dead river, was brought back to life by a sewage purification plant and a mandatory jail sentence for anyone who violated it. The infamous smog was removed forever simply by decreeing the use of smokeless fuel and heavily fining anyone who burned anything else.

Both were, of course, political decisions, responses to a well-informed and insistent population. That's a role that our young people can take with total involvement. To limit the role to a sort of fashionable hysteria or a sense of being overwhelmed by sinister, uncontrollable forces is not the way to get the job done.

Ottawa to Hire 400 Students On Island Jobs

By PETER MEDWID

Make-work projects on Vancouver Island are expected to employ up to 400 students during the summer months, sources in Ottawa indicated today.

But the stream rehabilitation plans are threatened because of lack of supervision.

This hitch in Ottawa's $50 million summer program to employ 30,000 university students across Canada came to light when the Amalgamated Conservation Society was informally asked by Esquimalt-Saanich MP Dave Anderson if they would "provide drop-by supervision on projects on a volunteer basis to supplement" department of forest and fisheries personnel.

Anderson asked the conservation society to prepare a brief on which streams and projects on the southern part of the Island should have priority.

He said any supervisory help given by members of the society would help in getting the projects under way.

MESSED UP

It is indicated there are a number of projects on paper but that Ottawa is not definitely committed to any. If not feasible, the projects will be changed, Anderson said from Ottawa.

Projects under active consideration in Ottawa are Colquitz Creek rehabilitation and Doobah Creek, near Nitinat Lake, which has been singled out by Ottawa officials as a good example of a river messed up by logging interests.

"Dynamiting of stumps during logging has destroyed the spawning beds in the creek. At one time salmon did spawn in Doobah and work to bring back the river to its pre-logging days will help both sports and commercial fishermen," an Ottawa source said.

$15 A DAY

Another project, announced earlier, is the clearing of the West Coast Lifesaving Trail now included in the West Coast National Park which runs from Bamfield to Port Renfrew.

Ottawa indicated it will pay $15 a day to students who must live out while employed on make-work projects and $10 daily if the student is able to commute.

Officials in Ottawa and Vancouver today said the stream-clearing program will not interfere with a plan to employ Indians replaced in the salmon industry in stream rehabilitation.

This latter project is being handled through the Indian Affairs department.

NO MONEY

The Vancouver office of the fisheries department said Ottawa has not passed along any word about the projects.

At present there is no money available for any of these things. There is no indicated boost in staff and should the expanded stream-clearing become a reality we will definitely need more supervisory staff," a fisheries man said.

There are three conservation and protection officers in the Victoria office. And officials stress that unless there is an increase in staff, nothing can be done.

The students, working without supervision, will do more harm than good. This isn't something that can be handled in a haphazard manner," said the official.

The plan, now before the cabinet, is being held up until subcommittees can co-ordinate the program and that Ottawa is currently talking to provinces in a hope that some cost-sharing program may be worked out.

The conservation society, under the chairmanship of Alan Meadows, 4960 Georgia Park Terrace, is undertaking to assist in any of the make-work plans.

"We're not only concerned with streams but we will also recommend other projects such as beach clean-up and park work" said Meadows.

Jack Davis.

Minister of fisheries; of forests; of environmental control; and (unofficially) of youth, during the coming summer months.

Ottawa's $50 million make-work plan to employ 30,000 university students during the summer months on reforestation and stream cleaning programs comes under the fisheries and forest minister.

Davis, minister-designate of environmental control, will also be responsible for the pollution clean-up planned this summer.

As a majority of the $50 million allocated to employ university students comes under Davis' control, Davis, unofficially, has been dubbed "Ottawa's minister of youth."

Schools Probing Forest Pamphlets

Specimens of forest industry pamphlets in use at Oak Bay Senior Secondary are being collected for examination by School District 61 officials following charges in the legislature the material is biased and misleading.

See earlier story on Page 45.

Bob Williams (NDP—Vancouver East) attacked the material, provided by the Council of Forest Industries and MacMillan Bloedel Ltd., with charges it was aimed at "brainwashing" students.

He said one publication, Modern Forest Management Through Tree-Farm Licences, currently being read by Grade 10 students at Oak Bay, serves to grind the axe of the forest industry and contains non-factual and misleading statements.

School board information officer Bill Staydal confirmed that superintendent Jake Longmore had ordered the material collected for an examination following a meeting this morning.

But he emphasized the administration was "making no apologies" for permitting material provided by business corporations into high schools as resource materials.

Trustee Peter Bunn, however, said he had been fighting a personal "running battle" to prevent the intrusion of the "corporate structure" into Greater Victoria classrooms.

"If we can't get unbiased text books I think it's a bloody poor show," he said.

"We had complaints as recently as last week from parents."

Dr. Harold Knight, vice-chairman of the school board, said use of material provided by industry is a decision for individual teachers.

Dr. Caron-Jamieson, another trustee, said he is against restricting use of such material at the senior secondary level.

Victoria parents of autistic children have tried hard and long to win a place in the public school system for victims of a strange affliction.

They haven't yet been successful, but Greater Victoria school board at its next Monday meeting may decide to seek education department approval for a special class.

Since any move decided upon is bound to take time, Victoria Autistic Association will keep on as best it can with its six-child pilot class at Queen Alexandra Solarium.

It's chief present need there is for funds and volunteer helpers.

For their sake, and for the parents who have worked hard and patiently to help them, I hope Victoria's autistic children will be given their chance.

As they point out, their children are not lacking in intelligence, nor are they emotionally disturbed, in any standard sense. They are turned inward, away from the world, and an important part of the bringing-out process is exposure to normal children.

"They're imitative," one mother told me, "and we earnestly hope they'll have the presence of normal children in a public school setting to provide an example."

Brought along as Dr. Ney has demonstrated they can be, they stand an excellent chance of eventually taking their places in the regular classrooms.

For their sake, and for the parents who have worked hard and patiently to help them, I hope Victoria's autistic children will be given their chance.

BILL WALKER

They named the best for the first 100 years of sport in British Columbia at Vancouver on Saturday night. But the question remaining is not who was named as having attained the peak of excellence for all to marvel at, but who named them? Victorians deserve to know.

Harry Jerome won the individual male athlete award, Nancy Greene, the female division, and the 1945-46 Victoria Dominos (who else?) the team award. There can be little quarrel with the winners, although individual preference would have dictated otherwise in the matter of the male athlete. All are international champions or standouts in their particular fields.

The Dominos, for example, need no introduction here. They were by far and away the top basketball team of their time, and the classic club of a long line of championship teams from Victoria which dominated the game through the 30s and 40s. The main reason the dynasty came to an end when it did was that several members of the team turned professional with the ill-fated Vancouver Hornets.

The case for Jerome is a strong one. His record of consistency and longevity is probably unmatched in Canadian track and field. Beset by many injuries, Jerome, however, managed to be ranked with the world's best for nine years. He never did get to win an Olympic medal as another leading candidate, Percy Williams, had done. But he did win gold medals at the Commonwealth and Pan-Am Games, and a bronze at the Tokyo Olympics. Besides, at various times he held or shared five world records. Williams won his two titles at the Olympics the same year. It was in 1926 that he scored a 'double' at the 100 and 200-metre distances. For the next 18 months he was virtually unbeatable.

Nancy Greene Raine, of course, was little Miss Everything in the world of skiing for Canada. She was twice World Cup champion and won a gold and a silver medal at the Olympics to boot. She earned her honors well and rightfully deserves a niche in fame. "Tiger" was the word she had emblazoned on the front of her helmet, and a tiger she was in the competitive field.

Albeit the results, it's the handling of the event by the B.C. Sports Federation that is the dirty, rotten shame. The federation blew it, and by its very action it is doubtful if it ever again will have the full trust of the sports-minded public, especially those on Vancouver Island.

At last report, the Island was still considered to be a part of British Columbia. In most places, that is. And the Dominos did win, too!

But the incredible fact remains that if this was to be an honest-to-goodness province-wide poll to determine the ranking athletes of the century, since when did the B.C. Sports Federation have the right to say that the poll should start and end in Vancouver?

The original idea was that a ballot would be run in B.C. newspapers. Nominees would be listed. Write-ins would be accepted. The result of this poll would account for 50 per cent of the points which would determine the winners. The other points would come from the judgment of a panel of trustees, all from the mainland. Naturally.

A wonderful plan! Everybody could have a vote. Democracy at its best. Then suddenly, operation foul-up. There would be no ballots in the Times or Colonist. No money was the ridiculous explanation. Besides, the ballot, which was run in Vancouver, was displayed only one week before the result was to be announced. There was hardly time to receive the ballots, let alone tabulate them.

It is not only baffling, but deplorable to think that a province-wide opinion poll could be conducted in such a fashion. Or even considered.

This is especially so, as in Victoria there was a prime candidate for male honors. Doug Peden's name was on the original ballot. It was well deserved that his name be considered. For in his time he had done most things well, and more often than not, better than most. He could list among his accomplishments that he had been a professional in three sports — baseball, basketball and bicycle racing; he had represented Canada at the Olympics and had a silver medal for basketball; he was an all-star rugby and soccer player; it was said he could have been a top-class tennis player if he had pursued that avocation. And so on. The list is long and, on comparative merits, in most sport, a glorious one. He was the all-rounder, perhaps Canada's best of all time.

There is an old saying in sport that can be applied. For it could be said without much fear of contradiction that some of the others selected for recognition couldn't carry Doug's belt strap. That saying still stands.

No fuss, said Doug, when the issue of no ballot was first raised. "There are others who deserve it more." But that's Doug's nature. More important, it's his charm, too. And as a sportsman, and a splendid athlete, it's really unfortunate that he at least didn't get the chance to have some votes from the Island in his support. Readers who asked were told they would be advised when the ballots would appear. But that was before the B.C. Federation bemoaned it.

The injustice of it all is that this was a poll in which only a selected part of the province was allowed to participate. This has destroyed its meaningfulness, and unfortunately cheapened the whole thing.

One columnist suggested that the B.C. Federation of Sports should be a top candidate for the Farce of the Year Award.

This would be a shoo-in. No poll is needed.

Lawrence 10 Points Ahead of Ted Plowe

Jim Lawrence of Vernon The scoring race will hold some of the interest in tonight's three-game schedule. The Cougars had a hand in 15 of their 19 goals in their last three games, and, as a result, will be at home while the Esso will be at Penticton. Kamloops will be at Kelowna in a third game.

With five games left to play in the regular schedule, Lawrence had 39 goals and 76 assists for 115 points. He led the league in assists.

Ted Plowe of Victoria Cougars, in first place most of the season, had six points over a similar three-game span and was second with a league-leading 55 goals and 50 assists for 105 points. He had six games remaining.

NHL Considering Offer to Purchase Ailing Penguins

NEW YORK (CP) — An offer to purchase the Pittsburgh Penguins franchise and get the National Hockey League out of its unwanted role as supervisor of the club's fiscal affairs was accepted for study Tuesday by the NHL governors.

Acceptance or rejection of the offer made by three Detroit men and Management Control Corp. of East Liverpool, Ohio, may come within 15 days. NHL president Clarence Campbell indicated. The decision will be made by telegraph vote or a special meeting of the governors.

The governors also referred to the general managers' committee, for a recommendation before June, a three-way proposal for strengthening the rosters of such members as California Golden Seals and Los Angeles Kings.

The proposals are: Restrictions on the right of any team to trade away its future draft choices; a decrease in the number of players that may be protected in the intra-league draft, and the development of a formula by which teams rich in talent may make players available to the "have-not" teams for substantial cash payments.

SPURRED BY DEAL

The idea of restricting draft-choice deals appeared to have been spurred by the last-place Seals' action in trading their top choice in the amateur draft to Montreal Canadiens for immediate player help.

The offer under consideration for the Pittsburgh franchise came from brothers James E. and William E. Fuller and James Stirling, all of Detroit, and Management Control Corp., headed by William Blair, which has its headquarters in East Liverpool, 30 miles from Pittsburgh.

Campbell, who disclosed almost a dozen other bids also had been received, described this one as a "takeout offer" — meaning the purchasers would assume the Penguins' net liability.

Bout Backers Not Depressed

(Times News Services)

Early returns indicated Tuesday that the box office draw for the Joe Frazier-Muhammad Ali heavyweight title fight might even surpass the $20-$30 million net profit expected by backers Jerry Perenchio and the Jack Kent Cooke-controlled Chartwell Artists.

"We did very well," said Perenchio as he waited for more financial and attendance figures that have been pouring in from across the country and Europe.

"It's like election returns," Perenchio continued. "All the results aren't in yet. There are some states still to be heard from. The results are not conclusive yet, but I must say I'm not depressed. Everything is holding true to what we expected. We've done something over 10 million already."

Meanwhile, Monday's fight brought criticism in an official Vatican newspaper, caused a power drain by Italian and West German television viewers, and a comment in Moscow that Ali had been downed by a "sledgehammer."

IDLIZED BY MYTH
Vatican commentator Rev. Gino Concenti, in an article in the Vatican newspaper, L'Espresso Romano, said the fight was a "primitive battle glorified and idolized by myth."

The Soviet government newspaper Izvestia compared Ali with an artist who had been downed by a sledgehammer. In a factual account of the match, its New York correspondent, Melior Sturua, said Ali was not favored by bookmakers partly because of his 3½-year "forced exile" from the ring.

Sturua said bookmakers also "thought that sooner or later a bruiser will get the hand over a scientific boxer ... an 'artist' will give way to a 'sledgehammer'."

West German broadcasters estimated that every fourth television set in the country's major cities was switched on for an early-morning transmission of the fight. Electricity consumption in major cities was 20-per-cent higher than usual in West Germany.

In Italy, viewers were estimated to have used 1.2 million kilowatts of electricity when they watched the match on four million TV sets.

The Italian power drain was estimated to have cost the government almost $50,000 and police said they were deluged with telephone calls from persons complaining of noise from TV sets.

From there the boats will race to the first mark at ties of about $5.2 million. It also meets the NHL's stipulation that the franchise remain in Pittsburgh.

"We don't believe in carpetbagging franchises," said the league president. "We have turned down all offers involving any move of the franchise."

The governors also referred to the general managers' committee, for a recommendation before June, a three-way proposal for strengthening the rosters of such members as California Golden Seals and Los Angeles Kings.

The proposals are: Restrictions on the right of any team to trade away its future draft choices; a decrease in the number of players that may be protected in the intra-league draft, and the development of a formula by which teams rich in talent may make players available to the "have-not" teams for substantial cash payments.

The Noisy Few: Roadblock To Democratic Way

Herb Capozzi (SC — Vancouver Centre) has a thin skin when it comes to tolerating loud hecklers.

So much so, he would like to see speakers at public meetings armed with loudspeakers louder than hecklers, or have them installed in soundproof glass boxes communicating to an audience wearing earphones.

"Noise shouldn't prevent the individual from being heard."

Capozzi, speaking to the Victoria Kiwanis Club Tuesday, said that Canada's current system of public meetings must have an "Achilles heel" if it enables a minority group to disrupt democratic process.

He was referring to the cancellation of Justice Minister John Turner's speech in Vancouver Saturday because of disruptions by a group of 30 demonstrators.

The people that heckled Turner's "law and order" meeting came prepared and showed the rest of the crowd just how easy it was for a minority to control a majority, Capozzi said.

If hecklers irritate non-violent listeners to the extent that they will jump out of the crowd and hit people then "the system is weak," Capozzi said.

"Disruption for dissent's sake can't be permitted, but I can't say beating will solve anything either."

"Society is designed so the minority group will be heard — and they're not. This means a change in our approach with the minority group."

Capozzi concluded by asking the group to look around at "the system we believe in" and to look at "our ability to live together as a society," then asked:

"Are you going to sit back and let that be destroyed from within?"

2 Moves Under Way To Save 'Old Town'

Limited action is planned on two fronts to attempt to save Victoria's old town area. Same Lane, vice-chairman of the Victoria Publicity Bureau and owner of the Olde England Inn, said he hopes to hold a meeting of all property owners in the area to work out a positive plan for redeveloping on the general lines recommended last week by architect students.

The owners will come through (with the capital to renovate their old buildings) if a positive plan is worked out."

He urged a "marriage of city authorities and private enterprise" to work out such a plan.

NEED CO-OPERATION

"Many of us (owners) are putting a lot of money into restoration and renovation now. We need co-operation from the mayor and city fathers."

Meanwhile, Victoria designer Jim Stark, who is directing the group of architecture students studying the potentials for preserving and reviving the area, says an old town information office will open early next week.

Located above Spencer's Store at 1110 Government, it will be open to the public and likely staffed by some of the many high school students who have become enthusiastic about trying to save the old quarter.

Lane said at present there is a "fantastic multiplicity" of regulations restricting what owners can do with their old buildings.

The demands made by fire and electrical authorities are unbelievable, even though many of the buildings are fine brick and concrete structures.

TO HELL WITH IT

"This is why owners often say, 'Oh, to hell with it,' and knock down their building for a car parking lot."

If Victoria does not save its only Victorian-era section, the city will become "like a cheap North American hick town" with nothing unique to attract tourists or new residents.

The tourist potential is tremendous, Lane said. New Orleans' old French quarter produces $60 million a year revenue for the city.

Lane said he spent $100,000 last year to renovate and restore some old shops he owns on Yates, in the heart of the old town.

A group of Vancouver developers is fixing up the old Eaton building on lower Yates near Wharf, as a restaurant, he said, and Victorian Sam Bawlf has renovated a building on the east side of Broad, opposite Eatons' car-park.

Before the Judge

Two young men were fined $250 and prohibited from driving for 18 months after pleading guilty in provincial court Tuesday to dangerous driving.

Prosecutor John MacIntyre said Lloyd Faires, 18, of 4290 Metchosin, and Gary Young, 19, of 501 Allendale, were drag-racing on Painter Street.

"They were going between 40 and 45 miles an hour in a 20-mile-an-hour zone near a school when children were on the road," he said.

Arnold Dillabough, 19, of Duncan, received a suspended sentence and six-month probationary term for shoplifting a pair of shoes from The Bay on Feb. 26. He pleaded guilty.

A suspended sentence and two-year probationary term were also ordered for David Richardson, 18, of 1757 Fairfield, who pleaded guilty to stealing a tape deck and two tape cartridges from a truck.

James Tom, 20, of Hot Springs Cove, was given a suspended sentence and 18-month probationary term after pleading guilty March 1 to charges of mischief and breaking and entering and theft.

Theft involved items from a furniture store at 1420 Broad. The offences occurred Feb. 11.

Man Convicted Of Manslaughter

NANAIMO (CP) — Lorne David Wampler, 23, of nearby Lantzville was convicted Tuesday night on a reduced charge of manslaughter in the death of Ethel Mae Baily last Dec. 6. He had been charged with non-capital murder in the death of the 60-year-old woman, his next-door neighbor, who was strangled on her bed.

A British Columbia Supreme Court jury of seven men and five women deliberated 52 minutes before bringing in the reduced verdict.

Wampler had testified he could remember nothing of the incident because he had consumed 20 or more glasses of beer on the night in question.

Mr. Justice E. E. Hinkson remanded him in custody to March 26 for sentencing.

Fishing Agreement With Japan Likely

OTTAWA (CP) — Japan is likely to consider discriminatory recent Canadian legislation closing British Columbia ports to foreign fishing supply vessels. Fisheries Minister Jack Davis said Tuesday.

He told the Senate foreign affairs committee Japan's view is conditioned by the fact that, by special agreement, Canada has opened the ports of Vancouver and Prince Rupert to Soviet supply vessels.

"A bilateral fisheries agreement between Canada and Japan could be negotiated at any time to overcome this possible difficulty," the minister added.

Mr. Davis told the committee, which is studying Canada's relations with Pacific-rim states, that while Japan favors freedom of high-seas fishing, it likely would agree to a 12-mile territorial sea "if there appears to be general acceptance by the world community."

Japan itself has a three-territorial sea. Canada, under legislation passed by Parliament last year, has a 12-mile one.

Mr. Davis predicted that Japan will seek re-negotiation of the North Pacific fisheries convention to eliminate the "abstention" method of controlling fish catches. It likely would agree, however, to seek alternative means of protecting special fisheries.

Mr. Davis said a long-standing problem in fisheries relations between Canada and the U.S.—interpretation of a boundary line in Dixon entrance—likely will come to the fore soon as a result of Canada's recent declaration of a fishery-closing line across the entrance's mouth.

Dixon entrance separates the Queen Charlotte Islands from the Alaska panhandle. FEARS INCIDENTS

Early discussions will be required to deal with the problem, which unless resolved could lead to incidents involving Canadian and U.S. fishing vessels, Mr. Davis said.

A big improvement in Pacific area fisheries relations between Canada and Russia can be expected to flow from two recently-concluded bilateral agreements, Mr. Davis said.

The agreements provide for co-operation in fisheries conservation and will, it's hoped, put an end to clashes between Canadian and Soviet vessels on West Coast fishing banks.

"The major problem which will remain will be the effect of large incidental catches of species of interest to Canadian fishermen by the large Soviet fishing fleet," said the minister.

U.S. Admiral Fears Soviet Superiority

WASHINGTON (Reuter) — Admiral Thomas Moorer, chairman of the U.S. joint chiefs of staff, said today that a Soviet strategic superiority over the United States is possible within six years but must be avoided at all costs.

Aside from the military implications, such a development could have a serious impact on American foreign policy, he added in a report delivered to the House of Representatives armed services committee.

Besides making the U.S. pay a high price in the effectiveness of its diplomacy, a clearly evident Soviet superiority "could destroy the confidence of our friends and allies in the deterrent power of our strategic forces."

MORE DETAILED

Moorer's review was a more detailed analysis of a U.S. military posture that was touched on by Defence Secretary Melvin Laird in his annual report to Congress presented to the committee Tuesday.

It was a mainly statistical breakdown of Soviet and American strengths in nuclear and conventional weapons and forces and contained little new information.

Moorer said that Soviet land forces—especially in terms of overall numbers—were superior to the United States.

But in many cases, the total worldwide assets of NATO are evenly matched or superior to those of the Warsaw pact, although "it is very unlikely the total U.S. inventory could be apportioned in Europe, whereas the So-

Newspaper Box Banned

MONTREAL (CP) — Gerard Niding, Montreal executive committee chairman, said Tuesday the administration will not go back on its decision to ban street newspaper vending boxes as of March 15.

The city's six major daily newspapers, in a joint brief to Mayor Jean Drapeau Monday, asked that the decision be reconsidered and recommended that the city join them in a program to develop more acceptable vending machines by the spring of 1972.

City council amended a bylaw in December requiring that all newspaper boxes and vending machines be off the streets by March 15.

Mr. Niding said "there is a question of reconsidering the decision."

In advocating the amendment, Mayor Drapeau said the machines were ugly, a nuisance to pedestrians, a target for pranksters and unfair competition for people operating newspaper stands.

The two English- and four French-language newspapers told the mayor, that an outright ban on box sales would harm the public's access to information and threaten papers financial stability.

Withdrawal Of Soviet Force Urged

WASHINGTON (Reuter) — State Secretary William Rogers, in a new move to bring about Middle East peace negotiations, has suggested the withdrawal of some Russian forces from Egypt as part of a permanent settlement between Arabs and Israelis.

Rogers made his proposal in a televised interview Tuesday night when he stressed the American view that Israeli security could be better protected by big-power guarantees than by its continued occupation of Arab territory.

He said the U.S. would be willing to provide military personnel for an international peacekeeping force created under United Nations auspices to guarantee a settlement.

"I think it would be very helpful, if we could work out a peacekeeping operation under United Nations auspices, that the Soviet Union withdraw some of its forces," he said.

The state secretary said that willingness of the U.S. to participate for the first time in a Middle East force was by itself an adequate guarantee of peace.

He added, however, that peacekeeping arrangements could not be a substitute for a binding agreement reached by Israel and the Arabs themselves.

Asked if it is up to Israel to agree to withdraw from Arab territories now that Egypt has said it is willing to sign a peace treaty, Rogers replied he did not want to tell Israel publicly what he thought it should do.

Yellowhead Busy

SASKATOON (CP) — Traffic over the Yellowhead Highway route increased last year by 22 per cent compared with a 4 per cent increase on the Trans-Canada Highway. Ted Sampie, executive director of the Yellowhead Interprovincial Highway Association, said Tuesday.

4 Contesting UN Leadership

MONTREAL (CP) — Andre Leveille, a former backbencher in the Quebec national assembly said Tuesday he will seek the party leadership of the Union Nationale.

Mr. Leveille, 37, lost his Maisonneuve seat in the April 29, 1970, general election.

Three other persons, all former cabinet ministers, are leadership candidates—Marcel Masse, Mario Beaupre and Clement Vincent.

The party convention in June will choose a successor to Jean-Jacques Bertrand.

Banff Has Problems

EDMONTON (CP) — "Panhandlers" and drug pushers are creating gigantic problems in Banff, the Alberta legislature was told Tuesday night.

Clarence Copithorne (SC — Banff-Cochrane) said increased police enforcement and greater government concern are necessary to prevent further misuse of Banff's recreational and tourist facilities.

He said panhandlers and drug pushers tend to destroy the "fun and security of the silent majority of the community."

Decision Reserved

WINNIPEG (CP) — The Winnipeg Police Commission reserved decision Tuesday at the end of a public hearing into allegations by a Company of Young Canadians organizer that he was assaulted by police last July at a demonstration.

THE WEATHER

Tuesday's storm dumped an inch and a half of rain on the west coast of Vancouver Island and over half an inch on the lower mainland. The system was moving eastward across the Rockies this morning after giving only light falls of rain or snow to interior valleys. Showers lingered overnight in coastal areas.

However, rising winds and rain on the Charlottes this morning indicate the approach of another active storm which will lash the whole coast with southeasterly gales and rain. This storm will spread occasional wet snow or rain into the interior later tonight.

Following the storm a moist westerly flow will spread across B.C. keeping the weather dull and wet throughout the province. A smaller disturbance caught in this westerly flow will bring more rain to the south coast Thursday afternoon.

Pollen Asks Strict Rules For Marinas

Greater Victoria Metropolitan Board of Health should be laying down "stringent" regulations concerning toilet facilities for marinas, Ald. Peter Pollen of Victoria told the board Tuesday.

Pollen said the board will have to specify so many lavatories for so many boat moorings. Oak Bay Marina has only one toilet but more than 200 boats, he said, so signs warning people not to flush boat toilets don't mean much.

Senior medical health officer Dr. J. L. M. Whitbread agreed regulations are needed, but the board had been waiting for regionalization of health services later this year before bringing in any marina regulations.

PROBLEM LIMITED

Board members agreed marina regulations should be handled by the health board and not left up to the provincial department of health because the problem of marina pollution is mainly limited to lower mainland and Island recreation areas.

North Saanich is the only local municipality with a marina bylaw.

Pollen said it is "deplorable" that the health board has spent five years trying to get health services regionalized.

Ald. Frank Waring of Saanich, chairman, said the problem is the provincial government's reluctance to sit down with the board to discuss the question.

"What are we going to do? Just sit here?" Pollen asked.

'THIS IS THE YEAR'

"No, this is the year," Waring said.

He said the board is waiting for the end of the current legislative session because it has been indicated something might develop.

At its last meeting the board decided to send a letter to Health Minister Ralph Loffmark requesting a final meeting on the regionalization issue with Loffmark, Education Minister Donald Brothers and Municipal Affairs Minister Dan Campbell.

No reply has been received from Loffmark, so the board decided Tuesday to send copies of all correspondence with Loffmark to the five local MLAs.

"The five members for this area should be made accountable," Pollen said.

Whitbread withdrew an earlier request to the three

Pupils Back Five-Year Tenure Plan

Procedures for firing teachers are not efficient enough, a group of students from the University of Victoria told the legislative committee on social welfare and education Tuesday.

Representatives from UVic's education undergraduate society told the committee they support a B.C. School Trustees Association recommendation for five-year tenure.

"Because teachers are doing a job, then they should be subject to the same type of job responsibilities as anyone else. That is, if they cannot demonstrate competency to fellow teachers and the students, then they should be dismissed," the students said.

The society told the committee permanent tenure is a system "belonging to the dark ages."

They proposed that all teachers be evaluated by principals every year. They said teachers would be protected from arbitrary dismissal because firings would not take place until a teacher had received two unfavorable reports from his principal and one from the district superintendent of education.

SIDEWALK PROGRAM OUTLINED

Saanich public works committee recommended a 1971 sidewalk program Tuesday which would cost $88,000 if implemented in full.

The recommendation will be considered at budget time next month. The provisional budget provided $80,000 for sidewalks.

The most expensive sidewalks were on Interurban Road, Grange to Wilkinson, $7,500, and Sayward Road, Patricia Bay Highway to Fowler, $6,000, both of which are in the priority end of the recommended list, and Arbutus Road, Ebney to Edgewood Street, Gordon Head Road to Arbutus School, $7,500, which are lower down the list.

Intermediate Care Program Under Study

Health Minister Ralph Loffmark said Tuesday the provincial government is taking a "hard look" at the possibility of financial support for an "intermediate care" program.

Loffmark wouldn't say whether such a program might be introduced this year but he noted that extra money has been made available to his department for "alternative" care programs.

The minister was commenting in an interview on a bill introduced Tuesday night which brings all community care facilities under the hospital insurance department.

This means that nursing homes and boarding homes previously under the rehabilitation department will come under the control of the hospital insurance rate board.

Loffmark said the move will mean much-improved uniformity of care standards. He wouldn't predict whether the government will change existing rate schedules.

The minister said the transfer, announced in the throne speech at the opening of the session, would be a necessary first step in any program of financial support for intermediate care facilities which primarily serve elderly persons.

The government has been urged by MLAs in all parties to take action in the field. Loffmark has said previously B.C. wants the federal government to share the costs of such a program.

Ex-Envoy in TV

LONDON (AP) — John Freeman, former British ambassador to the United States, has been named chairman and chief executive of London Weekend Television, a company which provides entertainment programs for Britain's commercially supported independent TV network.

STAY IN CANADA

Clark said that as long as such students attend day classes regularly they can stay in Canada under immigration rules.

"Can you appreciate the hold they have on these students?" he asked.

Clark said the tuition at the school for one year is $1,025 and the contract signed by the students called for two years at minimum.

He said advertising by the school in a Hong Kong newspaper painted a glowing picture of the school's program.

Porters Stall Climb

KATMANDU (Reuters) — An international Everest expedition including some of the world's best climbers from 31 countries has been delayed after many of the 250 Nepalese porters refused to carry baggage following the disappearance of their overseer with their pay, reports said.

More Townhouse Applications Due

A rezoning application has been made for more townhouses in the Larchwood area of Gordon Head, a Saanich public hearing was told Tuesday night.

The area involved is 8.04 acres between Larchwood and Mount Douglas School.

The public hearing was concerned with another property, 5.15 acres between Fairburn Elementary and Mount Douglas Secondary, which Greater Victoria School Board wanted rezoned for school purposes. The application was approved.

Residents questioned the destiny of the 8.04 acres east of Larchwood.

Mayor Hugh Curtis said only one proposal was before the public hearing and that there is no commitment by Saanich.

John Wood, representing the school board, said the application for the land between Fairburn and Mount Douglas "stands on its own merit" and was not presented as part of a package. The board had "no commitments in any other direction," he said.

The school board wanted this land zoned for school purposes because of ease of development and its location between two schools.

"There is a land swap involved" between the board and developer.

Municipal planner Tom Loney said an application has been received for the 8-acre site and later said it was for an extension to existing townhouses.

One resident spoke in favor of the school board application, although opposed the extension of Larchwood if it is inside a school zone.

The application for townhouses has yet to come before council.

Many food prices change from week to week—because of shifts in production, transportation, storage, etc. To keep up with these changes, you'd need a lot more than six arms. You'd have to employ a host of "shopping detectives"—experts in comparing and predicting food prices. Well, that's just what the people at Woodward's Food Floors do every week—constant, intensive comparative shopping and buying—to put the best values possible on our shelves. As a result, no matter which food store claims to have the lowest prices in town, you'll find Woodward's grocery prices compete with them, day in, day out. Let the "shopping detectives" at Woodward's Food Floors help your food budget make it. It'll save you juggling prices, chasing values—and a lot more.

H-Bomb 'Energy' Contained in Major Breakthrough

By THOMAS O'TOOLE

WASHINGTON (WP) — American scientists have successfully activated a large experimental device to safely contain the energy of the hydrogen bomb in a major step toward abundant and pollution-free electricity.

The first successful demonstration of a test machine called Scyllac came at the Los Alamos scientific laboratory at Los Alamos, N.J., when scientists were able to repeatedly enclose an electrified form of hydrogen gas that had been heated to temperatures of more than 15,000 degrees Fahrenheit.

PINK GLOW

While the experiment did not produce power or demonstrate nuclear fusion as an energy source, it was hailed as a milestone in the worldwide drive by scientists to harness the power of fusion for mankind's benefit.

"We got a beautiful rosy pink glow every time we ionized the gas," said Fred Ribe, Scyllac group leader at Los Alamos and one of the world's foremost fusion experts.

"This doesn't mean we're going to put Consolidated Edison out of business tomorrow, but it does mean we're on the right road to fusion."

The United States has spent almost $500 million and close to 20 years on the road to fusion, but it has rarely been the right road.

UNKNOWN LAW

For years, the machines built to contain enough gas at a high enough temperature to release the energy of fusion either failed to contain the gas or failed to achieve the desired temperatures.

"It was like some unknown law of nature was telling us we couldn't do it," said Dr. Robert Hirsch, deputy director of the Atomic Energy Commission's controlled thermonuclear fusion program. "All our experience was telling us that the plasmas were more clever than we were."

The plasmas Dr. Hirsch spoke of are the same gases that were giving off rosy pink glows in the Scyllac at Los Alamos. The first large-scale device anywhere in the world to safely contain plasma gas, the Scyllac is a $10 million machine that has been five years in the planning, more than two years in construction and almost seven months in testing.

"We're still firing off plasmas," Ribe said more than six hours after the Scyllac was first turned on. "We've fired off hundreds so far, and not once have we seen anything but a completely successful containment of the gas."

While scientists at Los Alamos made and contained their first plasmas, they must achieve several more milestones before reaching the longed-for goal of thermonuclear fusion.

What the Los Alamos scientists did was to fill an arc-shaped aluminum tube with deuterium gas, about a thousand trillion particles of gas per cubic centimeter. Next, they "shocked" the gas with huge amounts of power, enough to electrify the gas and create a magnetic field around the gas to pinch it down and hold it in.

It's this "pinch-and-hold" operation that has been the most critical in the past, and the Scyllac was able to squeeze the gas enough to raise its temperature to 15,000 degrees and hold the gas in pulses of as long as 30 microseconds apiece.

While 30 microseconds (30 millionths of a second) sounds like a very short time, it is almost long enough for a plasma to sustain a fusion reaction.

Plasmas need only three things to reach fusion. They must be dense enough and not enough for a period of about 250 microseconds.

The plasma in the Scyllac was dense enough, but it wasn't nearly hot enough. A temperature of 15,000 degrees is just a start. The plasma must reach a temperature of more than 50 million degrees to achieve fusion.

"We feel we're on our way," Ribe said. "We feel we've hurdled one of our toughest hurdles — containing the plasma — since we've demonstrated with much smaller machines than the Scyllac that we can reach the desired temperatures."

Ribe believes that the Scyllac will be ready to produce plasmas as hot as 30 million degrees inside a month and even hotter plasmas in two months. When that's done, the present Scyllac machine will be increased to three times its present size and the goal of pure fusion will be attempted.

LITTLE BIT OF VICTORIA in Palm Springs, Calif., totem pole was presented to sister city by B.C. travel industry department. Extra decoration is provided by Gladys Perrina and Susan Lemcke (top) and June Linthicum and Melba Church (bottom). Totem sits in Victoria Park. Desert Circus Week will be staged March 19 to March 28 to mark British Columbia's Centennial.

Dark Clouds of Doubt Forming on Rainmaker

ASPERMONT, Tex. (UPI) — Rain won't save Homer Berry now. He needs a deluge.

Berry promised the drought-weary farmers of Stonewall County he could bring five inches of rain in 30 days. It has only rained .65 inches since Berry's rainmaking rig began, and the 30 days are up today.

Unless Berry conjures up a good-size storm today, he stands to lose the $10,000 put up by a cartel of West Texas ranchers.

The situation looks desperate to Berry's assistant, Charles Abernathy.

"It's clear here and I've just about lost all faith," Abernathy said. "He hasn't, but I have. The winds are blowing out of the south and he says they might bring us some gulf moisture."

But the ranchers of Stonewall County want rain so badly they are thinking of extending Berry's contract rather than expose the retired air force major as a possible fraud.

"The ranchers don't want their money back because we need the rain so badly," Abernathy said Monday. "A lot of people around here are saying they hope the old major makes it because everybody knows he has worked well and worked more than hard."

But if the contract is to be extended, the ranchers want more proof of Berry's ability than a few wispy clouds.

"If he's had a couple or three inches by then, then very possibly they might extend it," Abernathy said.

"If it doesn't rain I'll have to get the cheques from the bank — each man's cheque is stapled to the contract down at the bank — and return them to the people."

Berry's rainmaking technique is based on the principle that smoke from charcoal briquettes soaked in a secret formula and blown skyward by old heater fans can draw rain from the clouds.

And Berry says it has worked in Lubbock, Fort Worth, Mineral Wells and Houston — all places where it rained while Berry was trying to bring moisture to Aspermont.

"Those are all mine," he said. "I've set up some low-pressure troughs aloft but some prevailing winds have come in and pushed them to hell and yonder."

Berry is not giving up. He ran his contraption all day long and well into the night Monday. He loads his boiling pot of charcoal onto a trailer and lugs it across the countryside behind his red pickup truck.

Cartridge Belt Armed for Love

If this is such an anti-war period, jewelry designer Stanley Hagler sees no sense in wearing a cartridge belt, avant-garde though he may be.

Instead of cartridges, his belt is set round with lipsticks, which have much the same shape as cartridges, but are a lot more peaceful. The belt is made of Swarovski mosaic, which is a flexible strip of brilliants.

It looks great worn with a black, head-to-toe body suit and takes the sting out of that cartridge idea.

The lipstick love belt is only one of Stanley's endless new ideas in accessories.

His handbags for instance, have curved frames to fit against the side when carried on their long straps of gilded aluminum links.

He even does an oxygen mask and tank in the all-over brilliants to emphasize today's polluted air problem.

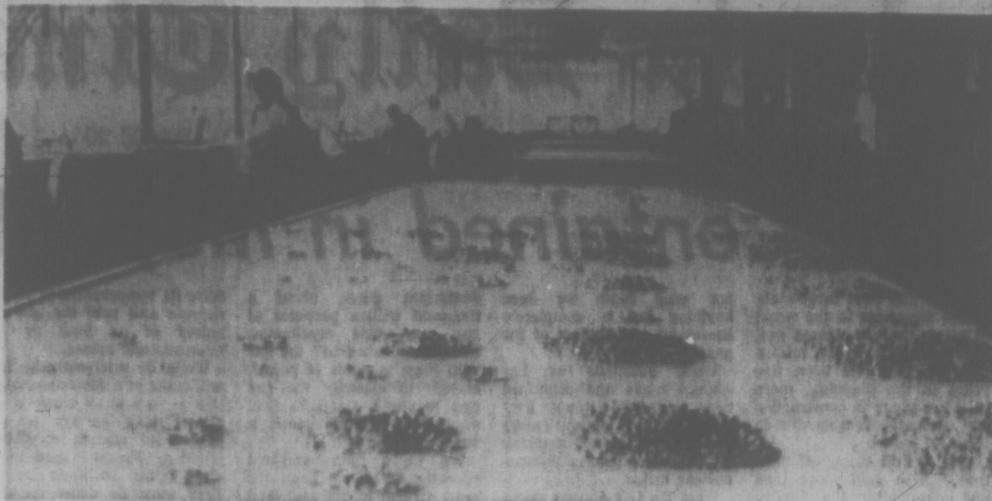

Beach jewelry intrigues this ever-exploring designer, and he has a collection of bangle bracelets and button earrings in lucite, thin waist-chains to wear on swimsuits, and frosted straw "wig" coverups for the hair with matching sunglasses.

Body jewelry is no quick fad for Stanley Hagler, but an idea to develop in unique ways.

There's his "corset," all set with rhinestone stars, his neck-to-waist black suede contours swinging with little sparkling tassels, his extended collars of jewelery, and his double-pendant necklaces which seem to cover most of one's front.

Color comes in with the use of feathers. Yes, feathers, as tassels on collars, as head ornaments and on belts.

Rough diamonds lie in piles on a sorting room table at The Diamond Trading Co. in London. Diamonds

Diamonds Under Plate Glass

LONDON (CP) —

Diamonds may be a girl's best friend, but she would be lucky to get more than a nodding acquaintance with them in the fortress-like stone building which holds the nerve centre of the world's diamond trade.

Security is unobtrusive but understandably sidewise at the headquarters of the diamond-producing De Beers Corp. and its Central Selling Organization, which handles more than 80 per cent of the diamonds mined each year.

Besides that, this prosaic eight-storey building off London's Holborn Circus is sitting on a stockpile of gems whose estimated value is roughly one-quarter of Britain's total gold and currency reserves — around $300 million.

Visitors may only feast their eyes on a fraction of this wealth through a thick plate-glass window, beyond which some of the company's 250 skilled sorters are separating freshly mined rough diamonds into various categories according to shape, purity and color.

NO TWO ALIKE

There are about 2,000 possible variations and no two diamonds are exactly alike — "each one is almost as individual as a thumbprint," said a DeBeers expert.

Sorters, who may take up to seven years to become fully trained, are recruited on a basis of personal recommendation or family connections. Oddly enough they are subject to no special security checks — the inner workings of the diamond business are run largely on trust and reputation and, anyway, they would find it difficult to dispose of smuggled-out stones.

From these long, bare rooms — six floors of them, facing north for the clearest light — the diamonds will eventually make their way to the cutters of Antwerp, Tel Aviv, New York and Amsterdam and thence to the jeweller's window and the engagement finger.

Only one-fifth of the stones handled are of gem quality, the vast bulk being the tiny, discolored or flawed industrial diamonds used in hundreds of technical processes from grinding optical lenses to surfacing skid-free airport runways.

REPLICAS SHOWN

But it is the gem side that glitters with legend and mystery, and replicas of the world's most fabulous diamonds are on show here, including the South African Cullinan diamond, still the largest ever mined.

Discovered in 1905 at the Premier mine near Pretoria, it weighed 3½ pounds in the rough and when cut produced nine magnificent stones, the largest of which forms the centrepiece of the Queen's scepter in the crown jewels.

Also on display are replicas of the super-haunted Hope diamond — a deep sapphire-blue in color — and the glowing rose-pink stone weighing 5½ carats discovered by the late Montreal geologist Dr. John Williamson in Tunganyika. Williamson, a millionaire bachelor recluse who died in 1958, presented the diamond to the then Princess Elizabeth on her wedding in 1947 and she had it set into a flower-spray brooch.

The Central Selling Organization sometimes comes under fire for what a spokesman called its "unashamed monopoly" in the world diamond market.

Apart from a few scattered open markets — one in Liberia — and the veiled operations of the Soviet diamond industry, the CSO, which calls itself a producers' marketing co-operative, controls the wholesale buying and selling process from mine to diamond cutter's bench.

Its officials explain that this is precisely what enables diamonds to keep their value — to make them everyone's best friend, in fact, in times of inflation. The organization does not make profits as such, but plows back its revenue into the Diamond Corp., a sister company which finances the buying side.

"Diamonds can never go down in price — they can only stay where they are or go up," a spokesman said. Sterling devaluation in 1967 automatically sent their value up by more than 16 per cent and when investment buying reached a peak in July, 1969, they rose again by 4½ per cent.

In times of surplus production, or lower-than-usual demand, the CSO keeps prices stable by stockpiling gems in London.

LONDON SALES

Sales of gem diamonds or "sights," as the trade calls them, are held 10 times a year in the Holborn building, just around the corner from Hatton Garden, the narrow street where London's precious-stone merchants are congregated. About 200 buyers attend, the majority from Belgium: Antwerp took over from Amsterdam as the leading centre of diamond-cutting when most of the Dutch city's Jewish population was decimated by the Nazis in the Second World War.

When the cutter gets to work with his diamond-tipped saws and lathes — only diamond can cut diamond, the world's hardest natural substance — up to 60 per cent of the original weight can be lost in producing the 58 sparkling facets of a "brilliant" or any of the other half-dozen popular cuts.

Diamond dealers go about their exotic business in surprisingly casual fashion. They send valuable stones around the world by ordinary registered airmail and often carry loose diamonds in a vest pocket.

Veteran diamond men recall that in pre-war London when there was less crime, it was commonplace to see a Hatton Garden merchant stop on the sidewalk, fish out a few stones from his pocket and study them in public.

Under law the prime minister has to pay $5,000 annually toward the upkeep of his official home, but this is a small portion of the operating expenses Parliament allows it.

During the last fiscal year, the estimated operating expenses for the residence were $41,000 including staff salaries, food and entertainment. The estimated cost for 1971-72 are $45,000, with the increase said to be largely for staff salaries.

There is speculation, however, that the couple will add dash to the capital's social scene.

Mr. Trudeau remarked while he was still justice minister in the Pearson administration that he liked parties and 24 Sussex would be a good place to have them.

The dining room there will handle a formal dinner for 24 and a standup party for 200 can be held by using an area

Prime Minister's 'Haven of Rest' Built in 1868

OTTAWA (CP) — Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau and his 22-year-old bride, Margaret, are the first newlyweds in the old stone mansion at 24 Sussex Drive since it became the official residence for Canadian prime ministers in 1950.

It remains to be seen how the new chateau, said to have a flair for fashion and cooking, will put her stamp on her new home. It has changed little since the Lester Pearson's left in the spring of 1968.

The house was built in 1868 by Joseph Merrill Currier, an MP and lumberman who called it Gorphyswa, a Welsh name meaning "Haven of Rest."

His heirs sold it in 1902 to Senator W. C. Edwards who willed it to a nephew, Gordon C. Edwards, from whom the government obtained it for $140,000. For a long time it was rented to the Australian government as the residence of its high commissioner.

In 1950 the government spent $550,000 on renovations and made it the official home of the prime minister — then Louis St. Laurent.

The St. Laurents lived there for seven years, the John Diefenbakers for six and the Lester Pearson's for five.

Olive Diefenbaker had modern laundry equipment installed and Maryon Pearson converted the basement recreation room into a showplace of Canadiana in 1967.

In 1963, shortly after moving in, Mrs. Pearson brightened the place with yellows, greens and blues and rearranged the furniture.

taking in the drawing room, library, hall and dining room.

One thing is certain. The newlyweds will be bombarded with invitations. Plans are reported for a mid-immediate events to celebrate the couple's surprise wedding last week in Vancouver — ranging from Government House to Mr. Trudeau's colleagues in the Commons.

An aide avoided saying whether Mrs. Trudeau could do as she liked about redecorating the mansion. But he said it has been some time since this was done.

Under law the prime minister has to pay $5,000 annually toward the upkeep of his official home, but this is a small portion of the operating expenses Parliament allows it.

The big grey house is shielded from the curious by trees. Mounties guard the entrance.

A wrought-iron fence was added last fall after pro-abortion demonstrators forced their way past police to hold a sit-in on the lawn.

For previous prime ministers and their wives a favorite sanctuary has been the second-floor quarters, where there is a family living room with a small kitchenette.

The floor includes two main bedrooms with a dressing room between them. The third floor contains guest rooms.

Icelandic Television Producers Are Paid to Keep Quality High

Advertisers on Icelandic television have no influence over programming. Andres Bjornsson, director general of the Icelandic State Radio and Television Services said in an interview here.

They have no say in program content, and they cannot even choose a particular time slot.

Bjornsson, accompanied by his wife Margaret, is on a speaking tour of Canadian and American Universities.

He pointed out that television is only four years old in Iceland and has by law a 40 per cent Icelandic content. With a population of only a quarter of a million, Iceland cannot afford to produce all the programs needed even though television broadcasting is limited to three or four hours daily.

The service buys programs from the BBC and Scandinavian countries, and some from the United States.

Bjornsson has a high regard for films produced by Canada's National Film Board. Canadian documentaries can say, "eat it, it's good for you."

Commenting on the claim by television producer Peter Watkins that there is a conspiracy of silence among broadcasters to prevent any mention of such dangers as nuclear war or world famine, Bjornsson said "This may be true. We don't like to scare people. As in many other countries we walk silently beside such problems."

Speaking about realism on television, Bjornsson said that no matter how realistic a thing may seem it is still only a part of the truth, never the whole truth.

"What you call realism is only what is plausible to you," he said.

"Even the news can mislead," Bjornsson said. "News concentrates on the exception, the man who commits a crime not the hundreds who never commit an offence."

Bjornsson said that at present Icelanders are very concerned about pollution. He pointed out that 90 per cent of Iceland's national income comes from the sea. "We hear that the oceans are dying. We see films of Lake Erie and are very concerned," he said.

He said that there is not much air pollution in Iceland. Hoses in Reykjavik are heated by water from hundreds of hot springs in the area.

"We have only one factory which might possibly cause pollution and we are watching it closely," he said.

During their visit to Victoria Mr. and Mrs. Bjornsson stayed with old friends, Dr. and Mrs. Richard Beck.

Their tour, sponsored by the Icelandic National League of North America and the department of Icelandic Language and Literature, University of Manitoba, continues this week with speaking engagements in Seattle and Edmonton.

Playboy Finances Women's Lib Suits

TRENTON, N.J. (WP) — Publisher Hugh Hefner's Playboy Foundation is interested in financing American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU) court fights on behalf of women's liberation causes.

The Chicago-based foundation's director, Burt Joseph, confirmed in a telephone interview Monday he is considering approximately 40 women's rights cases forwarded to him by ACLU national headquarters in New York.

Joseph said the foundation "will probably sponsor select cases, including challenges of coed curfews at major universities, discriminatory admission practices at other universities, and policies of forcing discharges of pregnant military personnel."

Although Hefner and his Playboy Magazine have been considered by women's liberationists as among the nation's leading "male chauvinist" institutions, Joseph said the foundation's interest in women's rights is not something new.

"We've always been interested in cases where there's been a double standard against women," Joseph commented.

Joseph said the foundation's interest in women's rights cases was part of a broader joint civil rights effort between his group and the ACLU.

Looks Like a Doll

LOS ANGELES — For the husband whose wife is always complaining that her husband's gifts are on the practical side, Pamela Weir offers what may well be one of the most romantic presents around — a 6-foot doll — with an equally romantic price tag, about $100 a foot.

Tracking the doll-maker down involves a trip to Miss Weir's studio-home in Benedict Canyon. After that, there's another problem — getting the doll home and finding wrapping paper large enough to cover it.

The 26-year-old Miss Weir considers her dolls functional sculpture, with every inch of the zebra wood, walnut and birch pieces sawed, sanded and polished by the artist, who also lines the drawers in the dolls with pure silk Paisley.

There aren't a great many Pamela Weir dolls in existence — 15 so far. She only started two years ago, while a student at San Fernando Valley State College in Northridge, and has been sidetracked from time to time into making even bigger dolls for commercial use.

Miss Weir got started on the mammoth dolls soon after the day she wandered into a wood shop class at the college and discovered how much could be accomplished with a jigsaw and some pieces of wood. She enrolled in the course, thinking she would make some small wooden dolls. But her instructor Ralph Evans, insisted that she make something practical, like a chest of drawers.

So Pamela made a chest of drawers — but it came out looking like a doll.

For her next project, Pamela was told to make a chair. So she made a chair — but it was shaped like a doll, looked like a doll and really was a doll. "I do like it," she explained, "because I don't like to do dumb boxes like other people."

It was about that time that Miss Weir began collecting a score of patrons in the Los Angeles area. One word led to another and soon she found herself sidetracked into doing displays such as a Noah's Ark full of animals for the children's shoe department at Ohrbach's new store on Wilshire Boulevard.

For those who prefer their dolls to take animal rather than human forms, Miss Weir has done a rocking unicorn ($500) and a rhinoceros ($600).

The classically designed shelves over this fireplace draw attention away from the opening, so the wall is

Shelves Attract Attention

What do you do with a seasonal architectural feature that is with you the year around? A fireplace, for instance, is a great asset during the cold months, its cheery blaze offering warmth both physically and mentally.

In summer, that same blaze seems stifling. However, without the fire, the large, black opening looks unattractive in the wall.

One solution, devised by designer Darrell Howe, is to create other points of interest on the fireplace wall, this in addition, augmented with heavy picture frame molding underneath.

In the original construction, the low fireplace was built into a brick wainscot that extended halfway along an end wall. Wormy chestnut paneling covered the rest of the wall.

To draw attention from the fireplace opening shelves were installed above the brick, matching the eight and a half foot length. Instead of a simple structure, this entire unit is extremely decorative, starting with the 2'x12' mantel addition, augmented with four-by-four posts support the shelves, but their purpose is largely decorative, their surfaces in classical, fluted design. Grooved, wooden strips, of the same wood as the wall paneling, hold the front edges of the glass shelves to give a finished look to the structure.

Neglect Kills

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Perhaps if our culture didn't make so much of the female bustline, women wouldn't have such a horror of losing it. As an American Cancer volunteer, I drive patients to and from hospitals for X-ray treatments.

One woman I used to drive had neglected her problem for five years and was a terminal patient when I took her for a few final treatments. Imagine, putting off having a lump in her breast examined for fear it was malignant and she'd have to have her breast removed. It was, and she did. But it was too late.

I, myself, fell a victim to cancer, and had to have both breasts removed. The day I came home from the hospital, I helped cook dinner; two days later was in the school car pool again, and progressed from there to the full routine and housework and social activity.

The loss is minimal. Sign me, Better Thirty Inches in the Chest Than Sixty Inches in the Ground.—H. G. Hamilton, Ohio.

DEAR H. G. M.: I wonder how many women are aware of the simple "self-examination" instructions, which are available at every local American Cancer Society office? They're free for the asking.

DEAR ABBY: I have a very sweet, elderly aunt of whom I am very fond. She lives alone in the country. About four-times a year she invites me to dinner, and I know she goes to a lot of trouble to prepare a nice meal. But she always gives me chicken.

The problem is, Abby, I have chicken at home every weekend as I find it is more economical than meat.

My aunt doesn't know that chicken is no special treat for me because she always says, when serving it, "This will be a nice change for you."

Should I tell her it is not a change for me? I don't want to hurt her feelings.—Sick of Chicken.

DEAR SICK: Perhaps your aunt always serves chicken for the same reason you have it every weekend. Don't say

Aging Argus Still Serves Canada Coasts

OTTAWA (CP) — Months after the tentative deadline it once set for itself, the defence department still is nowhere close to a decision on replacing maritime patrol aircraft, the Argus.

Responsible observers predict it will be getting on toward the end of the year before the department can announce its choice, which may involve an expenditure of $300 million to $400 million.

Argus aircraft are used, among other places, at CFB Comox, particularly for its northern patrols.

CONTENDERS

Leading contenders for replacement have been the Hawker-Siddeley Nimrod and the Lockheed Orion. A late contender is Boeing, which recently proposed to modify its 707 jetliner to fill Canada's need.

Only a year ago, defence department officials were saying a decision would be taken before the end of 1970. The previous fall, former defence minister Leo Cadieux announced the Argus, in service since the 1950s, would be replaced "after 1973."

The delay is believed chiefly attributable to continued uncertainty regarding the future of the anti-submarine role as the primary role of Canada's maritime defence forces.

Both Prime Minister Trudeau and Defence Minister Macdonald have expressed doubts about the wisdom of maintaining this continued emphasis.

Trudeau, in his April 3, 1969, statement setting out Canadian defence priorities, gave first place to protection of national sovereignty, or "the surveillance of our own territory and coastlines."

REPUDIATE

The statement didn't specifically repudiate the hunter-killer role for which both the Argus and Canada's anti-submarine surface fleet are equipped to carry out under NATO and bilateral defence arrangements with the U.S.

Nevertheless, Trudeau has made clear his dislike for Canadian involvement in this function, on grounds that it undermines the East-West balance of deterrence by threatening Russia's second-strike nuclear capability based on missile-firing submarines.

Both the Nimrod and the Orion have an attack capability as well as a strictly reconnaissance one. Little is known about the Boeing option, though Mr. Macdonald has termed it "interesting."

16 Schools Offer Drama

Sixteen elementary and secondary schools will participate in this year's Sooke district drama festival, March 15 to 19.

The adjudicator will be Mrs. Gloria Peyton, an actress who has had roles in several local productions.

All performances will begin at 8 p.m. Admission during the first four nights is 50 cents for adults and 30 cents for students. At the honor performance March 19 admission will be 75 cents and 50 cents.

The festival locations are as follows:

March 15, at Edward Milne Secondary; March 16, Millstream Elementary; March 17, Belmont Senior; March 18, John Stubbs; March 19, John Stubbs (honor performance).

Young Warns Job Creation Will Trigger New Inflation

TORONTO (CP) — John Young, chairman of the prices and incomes commission, warned Tuesday night that, if the federal government begins to create jobs for the unemployed it could create inflation as well.

And even if the government accepted the risk of inflation, he said, it couldn't change the job picture significantly for about 18 months.

Mr. Young told a forum on unemployment that economists realized 25 years ago that inflation and unemployment would be "this generation's problem," but they still don't know how to solve it.

Two other panelists, William Dodge, secretary-treasurer of the Canadian Labor Congress, and Dian Cohen, a Montreal economist, recommended an immediate program of government spending to relieve unemployment. They said this could include creation of jobs through a full-scale winter works program.

Mr. Young said every developed country is facing "the intractable problem of how to sustain a high level of employment and incomes without price and cost increases developing . . . .

PRICES COULD RISE

He said a relaxation of federal curbs on inflation could result in a situation where Canada, like Latin America, would have price increases as high as 50 per cent a year.

Mr. Young said the government might find a solution through regional development tariffs or restrictions on competition.

Forrest Rogers, economic adviser to the Bank of Nova Scotia, agreed that the government should "continue to ride along cautiously," but he called on Canadian businesses to supply more summer jobs for students in need of work to help support them through their education.

Mr. Dodge said Mr. Young was mistaken in thinking Canada has a serious inflation problem.

"I don't remember a time in the last 25 years when government and bankers were not screaming about runaway inflation," he said.

Wrong Example Set

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — C. S. Waters has been suspended as North Carolina's director of driver education after being convicted of reckless driving. Waters was fined $50 and court costs a week ago.

He was driving a state-owned car that went off the road and into a ditch.

Anti-War Protest

ROME (Reuter) — About 200 demonstrators began a three-day hunger strike outside the Italian Senate to demand a law granting the right of conscientious objection in Italy. The demonstrators say that 120 young Italians are serving jail terms for refusing to do military service.

Decisive Gandhi Party Victory Seen

NEW DELHI (AP) — Prime Minister Indira Gandhi appeared today to be carrying her Congress party toward a sweeping victory in India's parliamentary elections.

While no final returns were announced, early preliminary tallies showed her party was cutting into opposition strongholds around the country, most notably in New Delhi.

The Congress party was leading in 20 of the 30 constituencies from where early tallies were available in 10 of the 18 states.

Mrs. Gandhi herself piled up an insurmountable lead of 50,000 votes in her constituency in Rae Bareli, in northern Uttar Pradesh state.

The Congress party's best showing was in New Delhi, where its nominees apparently took away at least four seats previously held by the right-wing Jana Sangh party.

The Jana Sangh had won six of the seven Delhi seats in the last parliamentary elections in 1967.

If the trend continued in other parts of the country, Mrs. Gandhi's party could be expected to improve its strength of 220 seats in the last Parliament and possibly secure an absolute majority on its own.

The Jana Sangh belong to a four-party opposition alliance seeking to oust Mrs. Gandhi from power.

Although first official returns from the parliamentary elections were not to be announced until polling is completed later in the day in West Bengal state, counting officials in some areas, permitted preliminary results to be released.

EIGHT KILLED

Eight persons were killed and three wounded in West Bengal state today when army troops opened fire on crowds trying to prevent voting in the last round of the 10-day parliamentary election.

Action Deferred

VANCOUVER (CP) — City council decided unanimously Tuesday to hear submissions from the public before acting on proposals for a six-lane "scenic roadway" along the planned Jericho waterfront park.

A dozen groups and individuals have asked Council to hear their opposition to the plan.

About 250 persons have died in murders, clashes and riots since the beginning of the year in the state, which contains 22 million eligible voters. Three candidates have been murdered and two others who planned to run were also killed.

At least 10 persons were killed Tuesday, nine polling stations were set on fire and a six-hour curfew was clamped on one section of Calcutta where disorders have been widespread.

OLD FLAG LOVER PLANS RALLY

Canadian Red Ensign fighter George Burnham has organized what he calls "grand rally and meeting" this Saturday at 1 p.m. in Centennial Square.

Feature speaker will be Burnham himself whose subject is "the history of your flag."

Burnham, who has been waging a battle to restore the Canadian Ensign in place of the Maple Leaf flag, said "all those who cherish" the Ensign are welcome.

McMahon Does His Homework

CANBERRA (Reuters) — William McMahon, chosen today to replace John Gorton as prime minister, is a dapper wealthy politician known for doing his homework well.

Although no great orator, his delivery is high-pitched and halting—the 63-year-old former external affairs minister invariably is well-briefed on his subjects.

His

election as Liberal party leader, which carries with it the premiership in the coalition government with the Country party, comes after he was twice thwarted in his bid for the leadership.

Leaders of the Country party blocked McMahon, the heir-apparent, from the post after the drowning of Prime Minister Harold Holt in December, 1967. They accused McMahon of being too closely aligned to business and industrial interests and the post went to Gorton. McMahon also challenged Gorton in office but failed a second time.

STUDIED THEOLOGY

Born in Sydney, Feb. 23, 1908, McMahon studied theology at Sydney University. He served in the Australian army 5½ years during the Second World War. Afterward, he took a degree in economics and was elected Liberal member of Parliament in 1949, in the same landslide election that brought Gorton into power.

He served as minister of social services, primary industry and labor and national service before becoming federal treasurer in succession to Holt in 1966.

He became chairman of the Asian Development Bank in 1968 and was Australia's delegate at International Monetary Fund and World Bank meetings.

McMahon's reputation of being married only to his political career was finally shattered in 1965, when he married Sonia Hopkins, a society beauty 30 years his junior. They have a son and a daughter.

GORTON STILL STRONG VOICE IN CABINET

CANBERRA (Reuters) — Plain-talking John Gorton, who voted himself out of office today after 38 months as prime minister, has had a career of weathering storms and controversies.

He remains in the Australian cabinet by his appointment as defence minister, ensuring him of a powerful voice in the country's affairs.

His talent for survival was demonstrated literally in the Second World War when, as a fighter pilot in the Royal Australian Air Force, he was rescued from the sea during a Japanese advance. Later he crash-landed and severe facial injuries gave him the craggy appearance he has today.

Frank speech brought his career into eclipse in the early 1960s.

The Oxford-educated Gorton, 59, started in politics in 1949 and later held a series of cabinet posts. He was appointed Senate leader in 1967 and then, still virtually unknown to the public, became prime minister after Prime Minister Harold Holt was drowned in December, 1967.

Gorton married Bettina Brown in 1935, and they have two sons and a daughter.

Describing his entertainment tastes he once said: "I like my television with Redskins biting the dust, some violence and crime mixed in, and a certain amount of sex."

I'm not a boor—but I'm no culture vulture either."

AIR PIRACY INDICTMENT

SEATTLE (AP) — Chapin Scott Paterson, 19, was indicted on two counts of air piracy and one count of kidnapping by a federal grand jury here Tuesday.

He was charged in connection with the hijacking of a Western Airlines jetliner with 97 persons aboard that was forced to land in Vancouver.

Paterson, from Shingle Springs, Calif., was taken into custody by U.S. authorities at the U.S.-Canadian border at Blaine, Wash., Monday night. He had been taken into custody by Canadian officials when the plane landed in Vancouver.

The air piracy charge carries a minimum sentence of 20 years. There is no minimum on the kidnapping charge. Both charges carry a maximum penalty of death.

Paterson was scheduled to be arraigned here Friday in U.S. District Court.

Ottawa Promises Women Action

By JOHN HAY

OTTAWA (CP) — The government might name a minister to implement recommendations in the report of the royal commission on the status of women, Robert Andras, minister responsible for housing, told the Commons Tuesday.

Promising quick government action to implement the proposals "that are considered feasible," Mr. Andras said that if the Commons passes the government reorganization bill "it might even happen that the minister chosen to handle this will be appointed" formally to take the responsibility.

He told a reporter outside the House the government has not rejected the possibility of appointing a specific minister to take charge of the report.

That would reverse a policy stated recently by Prime Minister Trudeau that action on the commission's report would be directed by the whole cabinet, with no one minister in charge.

The organization bill, which has met strong opposition objections, would authorize the prime minister to appoint five new ministers of state for specific purposes.

BILL BOGGED DOWN

It has been bogged down in committee stage for more than three debating weeks in what Allan MacEachen has called a filibuster.

Mr. Andras was speaking in debate on a New Democrat motion urging the government to appoint a minister to consider the commission's recommendations. These include covering housewives under the Canada Pension Plan, provision of unemployment insurance for pregnant women, a national day-care act and equal treatment in the federal public service.

Andrew Brewin (NDP—Toronto Greenwood) said that the report "clearly reveals that at the present time women in Canada are frequently being denied their fair share."

He said women deserve equal, not special treatment. Under House rules, the motion did not come to a vote.

ATTITUDES MUST CHANGE

Mr. Andras said changed laws would do little good unless individuals change their attitudes about women's role in society.

Under the direction of central co-ordinating function in the Privy Council office, cabinet groups were expected to produce policy recommendations based on the commission report "well within the coming year."

He said a federal-provincial conference will very likely be held on the report.

Rene Matte (Creditiste-Champlain) said the government should reduce the number of electoral ridings to 150 from the present 264 and allow the election of a man and a woman from each.

Jack Bigg (PC—Pembina) said women should not forget they have been ordained by the Almighty to bear children. They have held an enshrined status since men came out of the trees.

They should stick to the traditional role of "cooking the bacon which the men brought home."

Bruce Howard (L—Okanagan Boundary) said employers have evaded equal pay for equal work laws and unions have been slow to aid victimized women—the "classic and most reprehensible form of injustice."

Murray McBride (L—Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton) opposed liberalized abortion laws. He said he would prefer a food additive that would make everybody sterile. Prospective parents could take an antibiotic.

"solid on the old basis, anymore" and women will insist on the right to divide their time between the home and a job. For many women a job was an economic necessity.

Canada was far behind many countries in establishing day-care centres and was deplorably slow in promoting family planning programs to reduce the need for legal and illegal abortions.

R. G. L. Fairweather (PC—Fundy-Royal) recommended establishment of a national experimental day-care centre for children of public servants in Ottawa.

He called for a quick end to discrimination against women in the public service and rejected abortion laws.

Under House rules, the motion did not come to a vote.

DEBATE RIGHTS BILL

The House returns today to debate the government's statutory instruments bill, which is aimed at protecting individual rights against infringement by government regulations.

The bill would set up a Commons committee to study most regulations.

Canada was far behind many countries in establishing day-care centres and was deplorably slow in promoting family planning programs to reduce the need for legal and illegal abortions.

R. G. L. Fairweather (PC—Fundy-Royal) recommended establishment of a national experimental day-care centre for children of public servants in Ottawa.

He called for a quick end to discrimination against women in the public service and rejected abortion laws.

Under House rules, the motion did not come to a vote.

DEBATE RIGHTS BILL

The House returns today to debate the government's statutory instruments bill, which is aimed at protecting individual rights against infringement by government regulations.

The bill would set up a Commons committee to study most regulations.

Grace MacInnis (NDP—Vancouver-Kingsway), the only woman in the Commons, called for immediate government support for a day-care program.

She said families will not be

NDP Leader Hopefuls Talk About Marriage

VANCOUVER (CP) — Prime Minister Trudeau came in for special and uncomplimentary attention Tuesday night from three of five candidates for the national leadership of the New Democratic Party.

Skeena MP Frank Howard referred to Mr. Trudeau's wedding March 4, saying, "We've got a Prime Minister who is not a real human being, although you could not tell it a week ago."

"He is more concerned with computers and technology than he is with human beings."

James Laxer, a lecturer at Queen's University, said Mr. Trudeau plays a variety of roles.

"He is the court jester at international conferences and authoritarian when he imposes the War Measures Act," Mr. Laxer said.

SWINGER HAS CHANGED? NDP deputy leader David Lewis said the "1968 swinger" has become a "cruel, heartless and reactionary, middle-aged, married man."

Other candidates addressing a meeting packed with 600 persons were: John Harney, former secretary of the Ontario NDP; and Ed Broadbent, (MP for Oshawa-Whitby).

Mr. Harney said the party convention in Ottawa April 21-24, which will choose the successor to leader T. C. Douglas, must also decide whether the NDP is to become a truly national party.

"We are not a truly national party now," he said, "because we do not have representation from Quebec as we have from English-speaking Canada."

Mr. Harney also called for tighter federal control over institutions such as banks and life insurance companies so the

South Vietnam Losses High

SAIGON (Reuters) — North Vietnamese forces have killed, captured or wounded more than one-sixth of South Vietnam's 20,000 man force attacking the Ho Chi Minh trail in southern Laos, a military spokesman said today.

The spokesman said casualties for the month-old operation totalled 705 dead, 164 missing and 2,590 wounded.

The figures took a sudden jump today, adding 250 killed, 64 missing and 1,035 wounded.

'FEED THAT METER!!!' HENRY SNAPPED AT LAST

PHILADELPHIA (UPI) — Henry L. Smith, 45, took a nap and woke up to find a meter maid putting a parking ticket on his car outside his home.

Smith took a spade, went outside, grabbed the parking meter with both hands and rocked it until the concrete foundation started to crack.

The meter maid ran away and returned with police, who found Smith at work on a second parking meter.

"I just got fed up," he said. "Day in and day out, it was feed that meter, feed that meter maid putting a parking ticket on his car outside his home."

Smith, an art museum guard, said he has received "quite a few" tickets during the six years he's lived with the parking meters.

"It's a crying shame when you can't park alongside your own home," he told police.

Smith was at home to catch up on household chores. His wife is in the hospital for surgery. He has been washing, ironing, cooking and taking care of the couple's five children.

"A man has a right to his rest. How can you sleep if you're constantly thinking about parking meters?" he asked.

Police charged Smith with larceny and damage to city property. He was arraigned at the police administration building and released in $1 bail for a hearing Monday.

Ottawa: Will Spring Come in Time?

OTTAWA (CP) — Other snow-weary central Canadian cities may get the storm headlines but Ottawa just gets the snow.

Just under 14 feet had fallen by Tuesday amid signs that patience is fast dwindling among the populace.

If spring doesn't come fast, there's going to be at least one psychologist who's going raving mad," said Dr. Bill Barry of the University of Ottawa psychology faculty. He had just given a scholarly analysis of end-of-winter neurosis that includes hostilities towards snowplows dumping yet another two feet of snow in the laneway.

One newspaper cartoon made a stab at light-hearted mess by depicting 24 Sussex Drive—the prime minister's residence—up to the eaves in snow while two buried individuals struggle toward it under the caption: "C'mon dear, Vancouver would make a much better capital city."

But it hasn't been that funny a season.

The 20th century record of 14.4 inches was broken many storms ago, on Feb. 23. Tuesday the snowfall stood at 16.3 inches—or 13.77 feet.

Historians say it is the hardest winter since 1869, when on Feb. 11 Ottawans turned out for the last public hanging here—that of Patrick Whelan, convicted assassin of D'Arcy McGee, one of the fathers of Confederation.

OUT OF STOCK

Snowblowers are nearly out of stock, snowshovels are snapped up as soon as they arrive and even salt is scarce.

Hospitals, doctors and chiropractors report a sharp increase of spinal aches and pains, caused by throwing tons of snow atop 10-foot snowbanks from deep laneway drifts.

Ottawa's normal $1.7 million expenditure for snow removal has climbed to $2.5 million, and Hull expects to nearly triple its $250,000 snow removal budget.

GALLUP POLL*Kidnapper Demands Should Not Be MetBy The Canadian Institute of Public Opinion (World Copyright Reserved)

Even though the life of the hostage is endangered, Canadians are very certain that governments should not give in to the demands made by kidnappers of political or public figures.

The solidarity of this belief lines Canadians up with almost eight-in-ten saying that the authorities should remain firm, as compared to one-in-ten, who think they should give way, and about the same number undecided as to what should be done.

The public is motivated by two reasons for taking a firm stand. In first place is the opinion that weakness in meeting the kidnappers' demands will only mean more trouble. Setting a precedent by accepting such demands will only lead to chaos, say these Canadians. It would cost more lives, and there would be no end to similar attempts.

Almost as many think that governments should not give way, because they must prove stronger than outlaws, and uphold the law. Weakness would mean that violence was recognized as means to an end, and lead to anarchy. "You can't bargain with the law" is a very strong belief in Canada.

However the 10% who say the demands of kidnappers should be met, when a life is endangered, represents about a million Canadians who hold that a man's life is more important than money, and that it should be saved at all costs.

The question:

"WHEN ANY GOVERNMENT IS FACED WITH A POLITICAL KIDNAPPING IN WHICH THE LIFE OF THE HOSTAGE IS IN DANGER, SHOULD IT GIVE IN TO THE DEMANDS OF THE KIDNAPPERS, OR NOT?"

Here is the national response, analysed for the reactions of men and women.

|           | CANADA | Men | Women |
|-----------|--------|-----|-------|
| Yes       | 10%    | 10% | 11%   |
| No        | 78     | 84  | 73    |
| Undecided | 12     | 6   | 16    |

Women are more hesitant to make a decision, because they are more concerned with the problem of saving the hostage's life. A typical feminine reaction is to be undecided on the question because, as they put it, "It's easy enough to say it's better to risk a man's life than give in—but if it were someone in my family, I wouldn't agree."

The big majority who believe that the risk should be taken for the good of the country as a whole, show these strengths in their reasoning.

Governments should not give in (78%)

Give in once, and they'll always have to; sets a bad precedent; will encourage more kidnapping; cost more lives; would lead to panic; kidnappers would take over ... 46% Since they break the law, they must be punished; if not, the act would be condoned; can't have the country run by criminals; the government makes the laws and must stand behind them ... 36%

Other reasons (including: it depends on the demands; negotiate first, then catch the kidnappers) ... 3%

Can't say why ... 16%

(Some gave more than one) ... 101% Those who said the government should not give in, focused their reasons on one belief—the need for saving a life.

Sweden Readies Back-to-Work Law

STOCKHOLM (AP) — Sweden's Socialist government made ready legislation today ordering thousands of striking civil servants back to work and said it was ending the retaliatory lockouts which raised the total number of government employees off the job to nearly 50,000.

Premier Olof Palme's cabinet said the back-to-work law will give mediators more time to negotiate with leaders of the strike for higher wages that began Jan. 28.

The government's department for collective bargaining announced all lockouts ordered by the government will end at midnight Thursday night. It had locked out employees in various non-striking offices in an attempt to generate pressure on the strikers to return to work.

The government also withdrew a threat to lock out 3,000 of the 5,300 officers in the army, navy and air force. Armed forces officers in Sweden are classified as civil servants and belong to the same union as the government's railway employees, who are on strike.

ECONOMY SLUGGISH

The demand by the strikers in the welfare state for 23-per-cent wage increases has been resisted by the government for fear of further damaging an already sluggish economy.

The strike halted trains and forced hundreds of thousands of commuters to take to cars or buses. A lockout of teachers left 700,000 students to hold their own classes.

Lockouts also crippled courts when judges and prosecutors were affected. Sea traffic to Sweden's chief ports was interrupted by a strike of ship's pilots.

The Social Democrats have 163 seats in the 350-member parliament. The three major non-Socialist opposition parties welcomed the government's action, and their votes were expected to put the strike-breaking law over.

Ideal Plants for That Rock Wall

By HILDA BEASTALL

Rock retaining walls and rock banks are becoming popular as gardeners spend more time in their gardens. A rock wall makes a pleasant change of level around a patio area on sloping ground; or a point of interest on flat ground needing definition of areas.

Whatever the purpose, rock walls and rock banks sooner or later need planting; and the casual gardener does not invest in true alpines for this purpose. Keeping the kinds of plants down to a minimum makes maintenance easier and gives a better effect. Two easy perennials come to mind. Both are just now in bud and early bloom; and both have tiny greyish foliage.

These are arabis, the white Rockcress, or Wall cress, and Aubrieta, the Purple Rockcress or False Wallcress.

Their greyish foliage gives the clue to their liking for dry soil (once they are established) and for full sunshine, so if your rock wall is in this happy situation you need have no hesitancy in making a planting of these right away.

It is best to buy started plants in small containers, or out of small pots, for moving of old plants is not often

KARPIN ON BRIDGE

By FRED L. KARPIN

Although deception in bidding ("psychic bidding") is frowned upon by most bridge players in our bridge-playing society, all will agree that deception is a must when it comes to the play of the cards. In the deal diagrammed today, had our South declarer not made a false card of trick one, he probably would have been defeated at his game contract.

Both sides vulnerable. East deals.

The bidding:
East South West North
3 ♠ Pass Pass Dbl.
Pass 4 ♠ Pass Pass Pass

Opening lead: Four of ♠.

A low spade was played from dummy on the opening lead, East winning the trick with his ace. On this trick South dropped the 10. East now pushed his chair back to analyze the situation.

Presuming "honesty" on South's part, South had been dealt the doubleton K-10 of spades, with West having started with the doubleton 4-2. No other possibility could exist if South were making a natural play: West's four-spot couldn't be his third highest, for if West had held the K-4-2 he would have led the deuce. East decided that West had started with the doubleton 4-2; and that, hence, it was futile to return a spade.

Since South had been "forced" to bid by virtue of North's take-out double, it was not unreasonable to assume that West possessed one of the two aces not in evidence. Hoping that West's (presumed) ace was the ace of clubs, at trick two East led his singleton deuce of clubs.

As is evident, West had the "wrong" ace. Declarer captured East's club lead and drew trumps. In the end, he conceded two diamond tricks.

Had declarer played "normally," by following suit with the spade deuce on the opening lead, the outcome might have been quite different. In this case, East would have known that West's opening lead of the spade four was either a singleton or that it was being made from, specifically, the tripleton K-10-4 (it couldn't have been from the doubleton K-10 or 10-4, since in this case West would have led his top spade).

Thus, without South's false card, East might well have returned a spade at trick two, which West would have ruffed. The ace of diamonds, followed by a diamond to East's king, would then have resulted in South's demise.

ROAD TO LONG BEACH TO BE STRAIGHTENED

The switchback section of the Port Alberni-Long Beach road will be eliminated.

Howard McDiarmid (SC — Alberni) said, Monday the road will be relocated to eliminate the switchback section between the present junction of Highway 4 and the Great Central Lake Road and Taylor Arm.

The new highway will go along the hollow of Sproat Lake.

McDiarmid said the government would call tenders for the relocation of 13.59 miles of road on March 10, returnable March 31.

It should be finished by September 1972, he said.

Whites Seek Rhodesia

SALISBURY (Reuters) — Immigration figures for Rhodesia so far this year are the best for 12 years, official figures showed Tuesday. During January and February a total of 2,557 immigrants entered the country — a net gain over people leaving of 1,537. Last year 12,227 European immigrants settled in Rhodesia, the highest total since 12,900 people entered the country in 1958.

Star of Love Story Film Says Squares in Style

LONDON (AP) — Ray Milland says his 100th or so film merely shows that people are fed up with hippies, four-letter words, permissiveness, the Viet-nam war, and disillusion.

"They want to get back to being square," the 63-year-old Welsh-born actor asserts.

He is in Love Story, the royal premier film shown this week in the presence of Queen Mother Elizabeth. Milland was in London for the opening.

"It is just a love story," he said. "Americans bought it immediately. We didn't know what we had. It has broken all known box office records and you have to stand in line to buy the book."

His most difficult role: Lost Weekend.

On this one he won an Oscar.

"It was really tough for me," he said. "I am a sometime drinker, maybe every three months or so. Now I had to learn how to be a drunk. I studied my friends, I looked around at the real drunks. By the time I finished that film I was exhausted. I collapsed."

"In making Love Story I had seven lost weekends with trips back and forth from Florida to New York. All without hooze."

Dr. Peter A. Egeleff of the University of Guelph will talk on neutron scattering in liquid and solids in the Elliott Lecture Theatre, Room 168, UVic, at 12:30 p.m., Thursday, March 16.

Everyone who has an interest in physics is invited.

Old Age Pensioners Association, Saanich branch No. 55, Friday, 2 p.m., in St. Marks Parish Hall, corner of Boleskine and Tennyson Avenue.

Rev. Ron Parsons of All Saints Anglican Church in Canoe said "having a strong union on the Pacific Coast appears to be the chief difference. The Atlantic fishermen, as well as most of the shore plant workers, have not yet developed one large industrial union."

Rev. Parsons attended the one-week convention as a fraternal delegate on travelling expenses voluntarily raised by wives of Canoe fishermen.

He said fishermen and fish plant workers in the Maritimes will have to learn to work together like their counterparts in B.C.

"Divided, the fishermen are relatively easy marks for foreign and domestic corporations which dominate Canada's fisheries."

Op-Tidings dinner meeting at Holyrood House, March 24, 6:30 p.m., will have Bill Cleenan from Calgary speak on remembering names and faces.

Ship Thermopylae crew to muster at the B.C. Maritime Museum, Bastion Square, to night at 8.

Work-to-Rule In CP Rail Dispute

VANCOUVER (CP) — A work-to-rule campaign by about 300 Vancouver-based CP Rail conductors, trainmen and yardmen was in its second day Tuesday and "will continue until a new contract is signed" said G. L. Larson, chairman of the United Transportation Union's Local 422.

"What's more, the work-to-rule campaign is spreading right across the country and will continue until a new contract is signed," he added.

"Conditions are more of an issue than anything else," said Larson. The workers are asking for an improvement in the scheduling of work, better job training, some form of overtime payment and improvements in the pension plan.

They are also asking for transportation allowances to and from the job and a parking allowance and extended health and welfare benefits.

Larson said CP Rail counter-proposals being mediated in Ottawa include the reduction of crews in freight and yard service which would "eliminate one-third of the men employed in this service."

TERMS OF PUBLICATION

The Victoria Press Ltd. shall not be liable for non-insertion of any advertisement before the amount paid for such advertisement.

In the event of an error occurring the liability of Victoria Press Ltd. shall not exceed the charge for the space actually occupied by the item in question.

All claims on error in publication shall be made within 10 days thereafter and if not made shall not be considered. No claim will be allowed for more than one day's rate insertion nor for errors not affecting the value of the advertisement.

All estimates of cost are approximate. Advertisers will be charged with space actually used.

All advertising copy will be subject to the approval of the Victoria Press Ltd. who reserve the right in its sole discretion to classify, reject or insert copy furnished.

Advertisers must comply with the British Columbia Human Rights Act which protects and affords that discriminates against any person because of his race, religion, sex, colour, national ancestry or place of origin, or because his age is between 44 and 65 years, unless the condition is justified by a bona fide job requirement for the work involved.

While every endeavor will be made to forward replies to bona fide job seekers as soon as possible, we accept no liability in respect of loss or damage arising from delay in delivery, failure or delay in forwarding such replies, however caused, whether by negligence or otherwise.

AUSTIN, Tex. — A San Antonio businessman told a Texas house committee Tuesday the sex education films shown to students in public schools are "pornography — stuff that would go for a dollar-a-shot in California." A Houston minister said sex education is part of a Communist conspiracy which he fought in Korea. But an Austin businessman, Fred Bell, said a bill to stop the teaching of sex education "is one of the worst things we could let happen to Texas education."

Bell was clearly among the minority of persons who appeared before the house public education committee on a bill to strip school boards of the power to require mandatory participation in sex education classes in public schools.

PARIS — Following his successful defence of the world heavyweight boxing crown Monday against Muhammed Ali, one of the first things Joe Frazier did was sign a new contract — to sing with The Knockouts. Loulou Gaste, manager of Line Renaud, director of the Hotel Calif. Castel in Lake Tahoe, Calif., said Frazier signed a contract Tuesday to appear with his group at the hotel March 25.

COVINA, Calif. — A municipal court judge has ruled that Moe, a 3-year-old, 38-pound chimpanzee, has a perfect right to live with his owners in the city of Covina. "After all," Judge Jack Alex said Tuesday, "we're all descendants of Moe's ancestors — and I must say his behavior is better than many people we see in this court." A city electrical inspector reported that Moe's owners, Mr. and Mrs. James Davis, were violating a city ordinance prohibiting harboring of an "animal not generally raised by man as a household pet or domesticated animal."

PARIS — Jean Jacques Servan-Schreiber, millionaire publisher and politician, told a news conference today he will ask the government to buy a nude bust of actress Brigitte Bardot as a symbol of France to be placed in each of the nation's 38,000 town halls.

CLEVELAND — Delores Thomas is no longer the city's most wanted traffic violator. She paid $65 in fines for 81 outstanding parking tickets. The 22-year-old Miss Thomas, who said she knew of only 17 tickets, borrowed the money from her father. He had to cash his savings bonds. "I have only 17 tickets at home, so I don't know how they can say I have 81," she said. She decided to pay them anyway. Miss Thomas had headed the list of the city's 100 most wanted parking violators, made up of persons with 17 or more unpaid tickets. The list was drawn up by police last week in a crackdown on illegal parkers.

Communication Between Actors

By CHERYL BORRIS

The 31st annual Greater Victoria Drama Festival continued Tuesday night at Mount Douglas Senior High School with three serious themes dealt with in three different manners.

Adjudicator Carl Hare, from the theatre department of the University of Victoria, explained that Riders to the Sea written by James Millington Synge portrayed man against nature; End of a Dream represented man against man; and Arthur Kopit's Chamber Music portrayed man fighting himself.

DEALING WITH PEOPLE

He said to the audience, "These plays are not dealing with gimmicks and stage techniques, they are dealing with people. It is the actor's responsibility to show us another human being, rather than himself acting."

He explained that in Riders to the Sea, Synge has found the innermost spirit of the Aran Islanders, and has been able to communicate their strength and endurance in the face of the Atlantic Ocean, which every day is a matter of life and death to the people.

He said, "Despite acoustical problems, we have been given a compassionate and tactful interpretation of this play. There was nice communication between the actors and we were shown a true family on stage."

SENSITIVE PERFORMANCE Kathleen, played by Maude Hall, gave a sensitive performance and portrayed a great sense of character; while Nora, played by Lauri Frederick, was a good contrast, showing her own seriousness of life."

Hare went on to tell the Mount Douglas cast that it was almost impossible for students of their age to portray age — especially the particular kind of age that comes from emotion that has been drained from within. He praised Bev Sawyer for her "fine attempt at a statement of grief" in her performance of Maurya.

There was a nice sense of period in the setting and costumes.

Plastic Warship

SOUTHAMPTON, England (AP) — A minesweeper made of plastic reinforced with glass fibre will be launched soon in a naval dockyard here. It is called the world's first plastic warship.

Plastic has previously been used in dinghies and small boats. It now is being heralded by the British defence ministry as "the next great structural engineering material."

The contract to build the 40-ton minesweeper, named Winton, was awarded Vosper Thornycroft 13 months ago.

A defence ministry spokesman said: "We have no other naval uses in mind at the mo-

Bilingual

Executives

By 1975—Drury

OTTAWA (CP) — Treasury Board President C. Drury said today it is government policy that 60 per cent of the executives in the public service in the Ottawa area and in certain other designated districts be bilingual by 1975.

He told the Commons committee on miscellaneous estimates that only 15 per cent of these high-ranking public servants now are fluent in both French and English.

In addition, 50 per cent of employees engaged in administrative tasks and foreign service are to be bilingual and 35 per cent in the administrative support category.

A target of 15 per cent has been set for public servants engaged in scientific, professional, technical and operational jobs.

Mr. Drury said the government accepts these targets and intends to take appropriate measures to ensure that the public service achieves them.

A memo was sent today to all deputy ministers and heads of Crown agencies to make known the new objectives.

Mr. Drury said that second-language training courses will be accelerated to help meet the targets, but the most important change would be recruitment of competent French-speaking staff.

The fact of the matter is that the public service has not been, and is not, representative so far as participation by Francophones is concerned.

"Let me repeat that this situation can be remedied only by the adoption of a manpower development plan which will result in the accelerated training in French of Anglophones in supervisory positions and in parallel the accelerated recruitment of Francophones in the public photos.

A provincial government decision to place photographs on drivers' licences was praised Tuesday by the B.C. Automobile Association.

F. R. Paxton, first vice-president, said the BCAA first suggested the idea to the government in 1970.

Attorney-General Leslie Peterson announced in the legislature that new licences issued later this year will carry photographs and licences coming up for renewal will also require photos.

Alaska Retaliates for Oil Tanker Protests

JUNEAU, Alaska (AP) — A bill calling for a federal study of safeguards needed to protect Alaskan waters and lands from damage by Canadian commodities being shipped over them was introduced in the Alaska house Tuesday.

In Ottawa today, Esquimalt-Saanich MP David Anderson called the move an effort to retaliate against Canadian objections to the Alaska-Cherry Point oil tanker proposal but added he was pleased that Alaska is aware that oil pollution is a serious hazard. (See page 2)

Canadian Dollar Rises Above U.S.

The U.S. dollar today was quoted for the second consecutive day below parity on the eastern foreign exchange markets, but still cost more to convert locally from Canadian funds.

At least four of the chartered banks — led by the Royal Bank and Bank of Montreal — were quoting the U.S. dollar at discount bid price, the first such quotes since Canada's currency was pegged at 92½ cents in 1962.

At the same time, the Bank of B.C. was buying at par and selling at a slight premium. The cost of buying U.S. dollars with Canadian dollars was generally 1 per cent today.

B.C. Education A Rudderless Ship—Screed

By BRUCE YEMEN and PETER McNELLY

MLAs from all parties expressed disappointment in the legislature Tuesday at the reluctance of Education Minister Donald Brothers to engage them in a debate on education philosophy.

Robert Wenman (SC—Delta) joined opposition MLAs in pressing Brothers for a statement about the aims of the education system in B.C.

Wenman described B.C.'s education system as "a rudderless ship" and added:

"Somehow, somewhere, take the rudder of that ship before it sinks in chaos," he said.

'No-Philosophy Philosophy?'

I wonder who is the educational leader in this province?" he said, adding: "I know the minister is in charge of administration . . .

Wenman said the minister should say whether the government has a "no-philosophy philosophy" in which the "grass-roots" are left to decide the goals.

"Personally I don't think that is adequate in today's society," he said.

"We have to somehow prepare our young people to survive in the society that we have created," he said.

Withstood 'Three-Year Assault'

The resolution, by Rep. Red Swanson (D—Nenana), states that "in recent days various members of the Canadian Parliament have issued statements of protest regarding the transport of Alaskan oil via tanker from Valdez to the Puget Sound area."

It adds that "Canada itself, each and every month, has at least six carriers plying the inside passage to Skagway, all of which carry oil and oil products."

Canadians are currently shipping on a regular basis oil by tanker cars on the White Pass and Yukon Railroad and also by pipeline out of Skagway," the bill said.

The resolution states that "some of the Canadian ships currently in service from Vancouver to Skagway are some of the oldest ships still used on a regular basis," and "if an accident should occur for whatever reason, Alaskan waters would be in grave danger of being contaminated or destroyed by oil or ore cargoes."

The resolution calls for the federal government to begin a study of safeguards needed to protect Alaskan waters and land "from damage that could result from our current stance of letting the Canadians transport oil and ore over our land and through our water and to make recommendations as to an action that may be necessary to ensure our waters and land are safe from pollution of every sort."

Tax Paper Sting Pulled—Benson

Times Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA — Finance Minister Edgar Benson Tuesday night tried to placate an intensifying last-ditch effort by taxation white paper critics.

He departed from his text during a speech to the Kingston Junior Chamber of Commerce to assure his audience that the bill he puts to Parliament will not be an exact copy of the white paper.

He said it will have a "wider appeal" than has been apparent from the violent reaction of the business community and he suggested critics may be mollified when they see the legislation.

Benson said the bill will be introduced "sometime this spring, probably by the end of April."

The ad lib remarks, inserted into a speech on inflation patterns, was seen as an effort to stem a sudden resurgence of lobbying against the white paper reforms.

For instance, last week the Canadian Petroleum Association made a "further and final submission" to Benson, concentrating its fire against the cutback in depletion trade-offs proposed by the tax reform paper.

DOZEN NEW CHARGES READ AGAINST AUTHOR

MONTREAL (CP) — New charges of sedition conspiracy were laid today against three Quebecers arrested under the War Measures Act.

But one of the three — author Pierre Vallières — had a dozen charges, including the counselling of four murders, read out against him.

Teacher Charles Gagnon and Jacques Larue-Langlois, a broadcasting producer, were charged only with sedition conspiracy.

PARTY REVOLTS AGAINST PM

Gorton Votes Himself Out

CANBERRA (CP) — John Gorton, Australia's plain-speaking prime minister who has been the centre of a storm of controversy within his own Liberal party, voted himself out of office today after a crisis meeting of the party.

He was replaced as prime minister and party leader by William McMahon, the country's 63-year-old external affairs minister.

Gorton was sworn in as Gov.-Gen. Sir Paul Hasluck at a brief ceremony later in the day.

The decision followed a three-hour party meeting at which Gorton, a 51-year-old former fighter pilot, faced a motion of no-confidence.

A secret ballot was held and tied 33 to 33, without Gorton's vote. He then declared he no longer had the support of the party and cast his vote against himself to make it 34 to 33. Gorton had been prime minister for three years.

Gorton's downfall resulted from steadily growing dissatisfaction within the Liberal party with the way he handled his cabinet and the party, what a Sydney newspaper in 1969 described as his "slightly arrogant, impulsive one-man-band style of leadership."

Gorton was sworn in as defence minister today, replacing Fraser.

"He is not fit to hold the great office of prime minister," Fraser told the house of representatives before Tuesday's meeting.

McMahon said he would consult with Industry Minister Douglas Anthony, leader of the Country party, to form a new coalition cabinet.

McMahon said he planned major changes in policy for Australia. In particular, he said, he will review the policies on the economy, tariffs and trade and the financial relationships between the Australian states and the federal government.

McMahon was reminded of the traditional antipathy between himself and Gorton, who was elected deputy leader of the party at the meeting that saw him ousted as leader.

IF CROSSES CANADA

Battle Looms On Pipeline

By DAVE MCINTOSH

OTTAWA (CP) — Is another great pipeline debate in the making?

A lot of people on Parliament Hill say they think so.

Many of the ingredients that were present in the epic parliamentary pipeline clash of 1956 are visible now, they say: such as American ownership.

Danger to the Environment

And there is the rich new ingredient of possible danger to the environment.

It all could add up to the greatest confrontation since 1956 when the then Liberal government used closure to push through legislation providing a federal loan to American financiers — Texas buccaneers, the Opposition called them — to complete a pipeline across Northern Ontario.

The Liberals reaped the

Pipeline Corridor Possible

Northern Development Minister Jean Chretien said in a speech at Dallas, Tex., Tuesday that Canada welcomes foreign capital for further economic development.

Mr. Chretien told the Commons Friday it would be possible to establish a pipeline corridor through the Arctic without hurting the interests of the Indians and Eskimos.

It is taken for granted here that the major part of the estimated $1.3 billion required for a Mackenzie Valley pipeline would come from the U.S.

This raises again the issue of American ownership and control, on which the cabinet has not yet formed an announced policy.

There is also the environmental issue on which the government has expressed strong views — but in relation to oil spills at sea and not into the land or rivers.

Canada and the U.S. are soon to hold formal discussions on a proposal by U.S. oilmen to move oil across Alaska by pipeline from the North Slope and then by giant tanker to Bellingham, Wash.

External Affairs Minister Mitchell Sharp has said sea shipments pose "great risks" and

Labor Mounts Attack

The B.C. Federation of Labor has called a special closed convention in Vancouver March 26 "in preparation for a possible all-out attack by the government against the labor movement."

The decision became known today as affiliated unions representing 146,000 workers received a call to attend the special convention.

"With the recent moves by the government ordering the Teamsters Union back to work and in proposing legislation that will take away the teachers union-shop provision, it was the feeling of the federation executive that we must convene this convention in preparation for a possible all-out attack by the government against the labor movement," federation secretary Ray Haynes said in a letter to unions.

China signed a supplementary aid agreement with North Vietnam last month, but its details were not revealed.

The promise of more aid, made by Chinese Premier Chou En-lai during his four-day visit to Hanoi, was contained in a joint communiqué signed at the end of the trip.

IMPORTANT DOCUMENT

Chou, who described the communiqué as an important document, said China would work hard to fulfill the various tasks involved in fighting the United States in Indochina.

A-G Kidnapped

MONTEVIDEO (Reuter) — Uruguay's chief prosecutor, Attorney-General Guido Berro Oribe, was kidnapped as he left his home today, police said.

Police said Berro Oribe, 59, was abducted apparently by Tupamaro urban guerrillas.

CHINESE VOLUNTEERS READY-SIHANOUK

PARIS (Reuter) — Prince Norodom Sihanouk, Cambodia's ousted head of state now living in Peking, said in a message published here today that China is ready to send volunteers to fight in Indochina.

In response to a question put to him by the French language news magazine Africasia, Sihanouk said:

"I can tell you that the Chinese people are quite ready to aid physically the three Indochinese peoples in any new escalations of the war."

I s'pose it figgers when t' Aussie prime minister votes himself out — ever tharin' upside down there.

Australians don't want Canadian ships spillin' oil on th' coast. That's one thing we kin agree on.

Mister Benson sez his tax legislation will be changed when we git it. Our incomes will be changed AFTER we git it.

Alaska Cites Tanker Hazard

Times Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA — An Alaskan resolution calling for protection of her land and waters from pollution by Canadian oil tankers represents "fundamental agreement with our position," MP David Anderson said today.

"I'm very pleased that the Alaskans are finally paying attention to the possibilities of tanker pollution and I'm delighted they are ready to treat it as a potential problem," said the member for Esquimalt-Saanich, chairman of the Commons' environmental pollution committee.

"It seemed for a long time that Alaskans couldn't care less about possible coastal pollution."

INTERNATIONAL ISSUE

Anderson won wide publicity and the empty of Trans-Alaska Pipeline System advocates when he turned the west coast tanker route into a major international issue.

The Alaskan state resolution doubtless is an effort to retaliate against Canadian objections to the Valdez-Cherry Point tanker shipment proposal but Anderson said it also creates a bridge for mutual discussion of the general problem.

Canadian regulations for controlling the tanker hazard in our waters and fixing cleanup liability on ship owners has just completed review by oil tankers.

PIPE DEBATE

and dangers' to the British Columbia coast.

He has been supported by an all-party group of 18 MPs who have told the U.S. interior department that an ominous procession of tankers from Valdez, Alaska, to Washington state would sooner or later result in an oil-spill disaster.

A source close to the cabinet said Tuesday that at the moment Ottawa's basic policy is to try to kill off the tanker route so that U.S. will have to consider the Mackenzie Valley route.

Mr. Sharp hinted broadly at this policy in the Commons March 4 when he said:

"A decision adverse to the (trans-Alaska) pipeline would leave us in a position of looking at the problems of alternative routes free of any prejudice."

A little later, he said:

"I am sure that the national interests of Canada and of the United States would be best served if a decision were made not to build the trans-Alaska pipeline system and then go down the Pacific coast to Bellingham (by sea)."

FORECASTS BARGAINING

The following day Mr. Sharp indicated that bargaining with the U.S. for a Mackenzie route will begin fairly soon.

"I hope we will have to give up as little as possible," he said.

Up to now, the Conservatives have not taken a clearly defined position on the pipeline issue, partly on the grounds that government policy is not clear.

But Mr. Chretien's Dallas speech appears to make it plain the government would welcome a huge U.S. investment in a Mackenzie Valley pipeline.

NDP WILL FIGHT

The New Democratic Party has indicated it will fight a U.S. pipeline on both American ownership and environmental grounds. Erik Nielsen, Conservative MP for the Yukon, has been insisting that the interests of Indians and Eskimos be protected.

It was the NDP, then the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation, that began the big 1956 pipeline fight.

It recently has been demanding a full Commons debate before any final government pipeline decision, which would have to be made if the U.S. ditches the proposed trans-Alaska system.

Mr. Sharp, acting prime minister when Mr. Trudeau was on his honeymoon—said in the Commons there could be debate on the issue.

Mr. Sharp then left for an African trip and Works Minister Arthur Laing became acting prime minister.

LAING COMMENTS

In reply to the same question Monday, Mr. Laing said:

"I am quite certain that a decision were taken to put down a major pipeline through Canada in the Mackenzie Valley area, the consequences would be sufficient for the government to bring the matter before the House."

Mr. Laing also said several

Shadow Mischief

POLICE FRAME-UP CHARGED BY ROSE

MONTREAL (CP) — Paul Rose told a 12-man jury today that police falsified a statement he is alleged to have made Dec. 29, the day after his arrest in connection with the kidnapping of Pierre Laporte.

"It perfectly true that I met those policemen," he said, "but I never said the things that are in that statement."

Reef Form Urged For Breakwater

The proposed Royal Victoria Yacht Club breakwater should be built to appear as a natural reef or low rocky islet, obstructing to a minimum the view from the shore, says wildlife biologist Roy P. Finegan.

As another alternative, a breakwater serving as a pier could be built, Finegan said in a letter to Dr. K. R. Thornton, chairman of a RVYC committee investigating the possible effects the proposed rock breakwater might have on Cadboro Bay.

This type of breakwater would benefit the community at large and add a dimension to Oak Bay which is largely absent—a maritime flavor, he said.

FINISHED STONE

This would call for a breakwater constructed of finished stone, surmounted with a causeway and connected to the shore by a public access, he said.

By apparent coincidence, the U.S. has just agreed to discuss paying part of the costs of an improved Alaska Highway.

"The area is rich in water-

B.C. EDUCATION

research. She said the Educational Research Institute of B.C. created in 1967 by the British Columbia School Trustees Association, has not received any direct assistance from the province.

She said no provincial education minister has ever stated the government's philosophy of education, and called on Brothers to do so.

Mrs. Daily also attacked the education finance formula, saying districts forced to exceed 110 per cent of their provincial allotment do so not to create frills, but to provide essential services.

She cited a BCSTA study which indicated the odd conclusion that districts which stay within the amount are able to provide higher service levels than those which are forced to exceed their budgets.

Because the government sets district budgets on an average of costs for all districts in the province, she said, it is impossible to achieve equality based on differing needs among districts.

She said that 29 of 72 school districts reporting on their budget requirements this year have indicated they will go between 110 and 170 per cent of the provincial allotment.

Mrs. Daily also asked Brothers to state the government's policy on experimental programs and curriculum changes in B.C. schools.

Brothers said United States educators have told him that new programs take seven years to reveal themselves as successes or failures.

STUDENT SUFFERS

If the program is bad, as has been the new maths for average students, Brothers said, the student has had to suffer through it.

David Brousson (L—North Vancouver-Capilano) also attacked the finance formula, saying large districts with few students and high operating costs are disadvantaged.

Brousson said five-year plans at every level of education are needed for proper financing, and he proposed more technical courses at the B.C. Institute of Technology.

For better land use and reduced construction costs, the government should consider multi-purpose construction at school sites, he said.

Scott Wallace (SC—Oak Bay) said he regretted the house has not had a clear philosophical statement on education, so he proposed one.

Education, said Wallace, is a "stimulation of the senses and a creating in the individual an awareness of his surroundings." He said B.C.'s school system is better than in his native Scotland where students were not encouraged to hold opinions or think independently.

But he said school children ought to get out more into the world and see factories, offices, courts, and so on.

Wallace said population problems should be taught in elementary school, because ecology must be studied in terms of people as well as pollution.

And he asked the government to spend more money on research into the physical causes of learning disorders.

Liberal Leader Pat McGee said B.C.'s capital and operating grants to the three provincial universities have not increased in proportion to increased needs.

During the last five years, B.C. has spent $58 million for university capital projects, whereas Ontario with three times B.C.'s population has spent 10 times this amount, $626.5 million. Alberta in the same period has spent $184.3 million, but it has only two-thirds B.C.'s population, McGee said.

Ontario and Alberta also outstrip B.C. in the proportion of money they allocate for operating grants, he said.

McGeer predicted 20,000 additional students will attend B.C. universities in the next five years, requiring $200 million to update and maintain facilities. He called on Brothers to hire a consulting firm to set guidelines for future financial needs of provincial universities.

In response to several questions about whether the government intends to release the Perry report on university financing, Brothers would only say that the report is still under consideration.

Brothers' salary was approved at 11:15 p.m. after seven hours debate.

Mr. Sharp, acting prime minister when Mr. Trudeau was on his honeymoon—said in the Commons there could be debate on the issue.

Mr. Sharp then left for an African trip and Works Minister Arthur Laing became acting prime minister.

UIC CHANGES OUTLINED

OTTAWA (CP) — The Commons gave first reading today to a bill incorporating the major reforms proposed last year in the government's white paper on unemployment insurance.

Introduced by Labor Minister Bryce Mackay, the bill shortens to eight weeks from 20 the period a jobless worker must have been employed to qualify for benefits.

The bill would also raise the maximum benefit to $100 a week from $57 for an unemployed worker with a family.

In addition, as recommended by the Commons labor committee which studied the white paper, the bill sets a minimum benefit payment of $20 weekly. Further, any claimant who earned less than $50 a week would receive 75 per cent of his income throughout the benefit period.

The new benefit rates were to be introduced in stages between June 27 and the end of the year.

Pakistani President Faces Defiant Sheik

DACCA (AP) — East Pakistan's business and political leaders today sought ways to avert a growing tieup in the province's financial life as they awaited the arrival of President Agha Mohammed Yahya Khan.

British and West German civilians continued to leave the province at the urging of their governments, and the British government ordered 10 young workers in the countryside for volunteer service organizations to come to Dacca for safety.

Peking Visit

OTTAWA (CP) — Arthur Andrew, director-general of the external affairs department's Asian bureau, will pay a four-day visit to Canada's new embassy in Peking starting next Friday.

The external affairs department said today Mr. Andrew will make the call during the course of a tour of Canadian diplomatic missions in the Far East.

STRIKE-LOCKOUT

The dispute produced a 10-day strike-lockout in the general trucking and warehouse industry which ended when the provincial government ordered a resumption of work and compulsory arbitration.

A spokesman said eight members of the 18-man crew of the fishing vessel Nissei Maru were rescued by other ships of the fleet. He said 18 ships were continuing a search.

And it may also prune tax incentives for resource exploration less rigorously than originally proposed.

But it's still an odds-on bet that capital gains taxation will be introduced by the legislation—although it probably will be limited to effective rates of 25 per cent on corporations and 30 per cent on personal income.

And, despite the most vehement attacks of the entire critical barrage, there appears little doubt that the three-year tax exemption benefits enjoyed by new mining operations will be taken away.

When the commission decides there will be a hearing, both sides will be notified, the areas of dispute will be set out and a date stated for the hearing. The Teamsters Union announced earlier it will boycott the hearing.

Medina Denies Order

FORT BENNING, Ga. (AP) — Lieut. William Calley's company commander at My Lai, Capt. Ernest Medina, denied from the witness stand today that he ever ordered Calley to kill or "waste" South Vietnamese civilians.

A spokesman said eight members of the 18-man crew of the fishing vessel Nissei Maru were rescued by other ships of the fleet. He said 18 ships were continuing a search.

'Asphalt-Turning'

Beacon Hill Road to Become Grass

An official asphalt-turning will take place in Beacon Hill Park next week to mark the return of an obsolete roadbed to pure parkland.

City parks director Cliff Bate said the change from roadway to grass is part of a general plan to reorganize park traffic in which several portions of road will be removed.

Parks committee chairman Ald. Clyde Savage will remove the first chunk of asphalt at 9:30 a.m. Monday.

The road involved is a section about 100 yards long and 20 feet wide called the Upper Nursery Road, running south from the cricket pitch. All asphalt will be removed, soil placed in the hole and the area seeded to grass "and allowed to go back to the natural state," Bate said.

Pollution Panic Not the Answer

By Jack Scott.

My brooding about the inherent dangers of Pollution Over-Kill began one blue-and-gold day last autumn when I'd a luncheon date with six seniors at the university.

In the morning I'd done a little raking and was burning a mound of maple leaves, moving occasionally to leeward to savor the most evocative of all aromas, when two boys in their late teens came walking by. As they passed, one of the boys turned and said, "You're making pollution there, mister," I thought he was kidding. "Gorgeous, isn't it?" I called back. He muttered something to his companion, unsmiling, and they walked on. He had not been kidding.

My lunch with the seniors was to sample their views on an entirely different matter. As it turned out, we talked of little else but ecological doom. That was their way of putting it. It seemed almost an obsession with them. So much so, indeed, that four out of six of these bright young people had decided to remain in Victoria, rather than hurl themselves at greater cities, simply because the air is sweeter here.

When I posed the hypothetical question of whether they'd accept the challenge of launching a career, say, in New York, the answer was unanimously no. They did not choose to perish from carbon-monoxide.

Since then I've confirmed that earlier suspicion that pollution is the one blight of society, globally or locally, that most concerns the younger set. With some it's more than merely concern. There are many who see it, with stark pessimism, as an early death sentence for humanity and for themselves. They talk of the "killing" of Lake Erie or of Thor Heyerdahl's mid-ocean discovery of drifting debris, with no less apprehension than they talk of detergent foam in the Gorge or the billowing smoke from the B.C. Forest Products mill.

Jack Davis, in his new role as minister of environment, recently described this "doomsday talk" as "poppycock" and "a sort of death wish." Certainly if it is instilling the kind of Chicken Little psychosis that will keep a substantial number of young people from going out to meet the timeless challenge of the cruel, dirty old world, it obviously needs some reassessment.

It can be argued, of course, that a certain amount of hand-wringing panic was needed to bring the public to a full awareness of the very real dangers involved, that without it Davis, himself, might not now be in that worthwhile role as watchdog.

Certainly one noteworthy effect has been the grass roots development of the Society for Pollution and Environmental Control. I know of no more dedicated and informed group of laymen. If over-kill has been part of SPEC's technique, too, it can hardly be faulted. I was all for the Cowichan-Malahat branch, under the admirable Kurt Horn, when they dumped their garbage on the property of the kraft mill at Crofton on the simple theory that garbage-dumping should be a reciprocal right.

That particular mill, in full view of my Salt Spring Island retreat, has been an object lesson in how easy it is to become hung-up on industrial carelessness or irresponsibility. I can remember that slope and that bright shore before the blight came; can remember, too, the glossy public-relations handouts assuring one and all that modern techniques would prevent the mill from becoming a misfortune. I never drive by there through that obscene drench of acrid smoke without experiencing fury.

For fury and despair ought to be kept in balance, since one might so easily cancel out the other. Indeed, of all the world's problems, pollution is far and away the most vulnerable to direct, specific, cool-headed action.

It's understandable that there should be a profound sense of defeatism in the continuing stock-piling of nuclear bombs, described the other day by Dr. Hugh Keenleyside as the greatest continuing threat to man's survival, or in the evidence that the world's population explosion is still unchecked or that one in every three humans on this earth is hungry.

Environmental pollution, in comparison, is a sitting duck. It comes down to localized situations. It can be stopped by rules that are easily policed. When it is controlled by enlightened legislation it can be vanquished. Indeed, the whole of nature in every shift of wind and tide is a kind of gigantic, global housekeeping operation ready to complete the job if we've brains enough to blow the whistle.

Jack Davis says that the ecological situation is still under control, that we can tip the balance of nature back again if we do the right thing.

If proof were needed that we're a long way short of the point of no return, the two great experiments in London are classic cases. The Thames, a dead river, was brought back to life by a sewage purification plan and a mandatory jail sentence for anyone who violated it. The infamous smog was removed forever simply by decreeing the use of smokeless fuel and heavily fining anyone who burned anything else.

Both were, of course, political decisions, responses to a well-informed and insistent population. That's a role that our young people can take with total involvement. To limit the role to a sort of fashionable hysteria or a sense of being overwhelmed by sinister, uncontrollable forces is not the way to get the job done.

BILL WALKER

They named the best for the first 100 years of sport in British Columbia at Vancouver on Saturday night. But the question remaining is not who was named as having attained the peak of excellence for all to marvel at, but who named them? Victorians deserve to know.

Harry Jerome won the individual male athlete award, Nancy Greene, the female division, and the 1945-46 Victoria Dominos (who else?) the team award. There can be little quarrel with the winners, although individual preference would have dictated otherwise in the matter of the male athlete. All are international champions or standouts in their particular fields.

The Dominos, for example, need no introduction here. They were by far and away the top basketball team of their time, and the classic club of a long line of championship teams from Victoria which dominated the game through the 30s and 40s. The main reason the dynasty came to an end when it did was that several members of the team turned professional with the ill-fated Vancouver Hornets.

The case for Jerome is a strong one. His record of consistency and longevity is probably unmatched in Canadian track and field. Beset by many injuries, Jerome, however, managed to be ranked with the world's best for nine years. He never did get to win an Olympic medal as another leading candidate, Percy Williams, had done. But he did win gold medals at the Commonwealth and Pan-Am Games, and a bronze at the Tokyo Olympics. Besides, at various times he held or shared five world records. Williams won his two titles at the Olympics the same year. It was in 1928 that he scored a 'double' at the 100 and 200-metre distances. For the next 18 months he was virtually unbeatable.

Nancy Greene Raine, of course, was little Miss Everything in the world of skiing for Canada. She was twice World Cup champion and won a gold and a silver medal at the Olympics to boot. She earned her honors well and rightfully deserves a niche in fame. "Tiger" was the word she had emblazoned on the front of her helmet, and a tiger she was in the competitive field.

Albeit the results, it's the handling of the event by the B.C. Sports Federation that is the dirty, rotten shame. The federation blew it, and by its very action it is doubtful if ever again will have the full trust of the sports-minded public, especially those on Vancouver Island.

At last report, the Island was still considered to be a part of British Columbia. In most places that is. And the Dominos did win, too!

But the incredible fact remains that if this was to be an honest-to-goodness province-wide poll to determine the ranking athletes of the century, since when did the B.C. Sports Federation have the right to say that the poll should start and end in Vancouver?

The original idea was that a ballot would be run in B.C. newspapers. Nominees would be listed. Write-ins would be accepted. The result of this poll would account for 50 per cent of the points which would determine the winners. The other points would come from the judgment of a panel of trustees, all from the mainland. Naturally.

A wonderful plan! Everybody could have a vote. Democracy at its best. Then suddenly, operation foul-up. There would be no ballots in the Times or Colonist. No money was the ridiculous explanation. Besides, the ballot, which was run in Vancouver, was displayed only one week before the result was to be announced. There was hardly time to receive the ballots, let alone tabulate them.

It is not only baffling, but deplorable to think that a province-wide opinion poll could be conducted in such a fashion. Or even considered.

This is especially so, as in Victoria there was a prime candidate for male honors. Doug Peden's name was on the original ballot. It was well deserved that his name be considered. For in his time he had done most things well, and more often than not, better than most. He could list among his accomplishments that he had been a professional in three sports — baseball, basketball and bicycle racing; he had represented Canada at the Olympics and had a silver medal for basketball; he was an all-star rugby and soccer player; it was said he could have been a top-class tennis player if he had pursued that avocation. And so on. The list is long and, on comparative merits, in most sport, a glorious one. He was the all-round, perhaps Canada's best of all time.

There is an old saying in sport that can be applied. For it could be said without much fear of contradiction that some of the others selected for recognition couldn't carry Doug's belt strap. That saying still stands.

No fuss, said Doug, when the issue of no ballot was first raised. "There are others who deserve it more." But that's Doug's nature. More important, it's his charm, too. And as a sportsman, and a splendid athlete, it's really unfortunate that he at least didn't get the chance to have some votes from the Island in his support. Readers who asked were told they would be advised when the ballots would appear. But that was before the B.C. Federation bungled it.

The injustice of it all is that this was a poll in which only a selected part of the province was allowed to participate. This has destroyed its meaningfulness, and unfortunately cheapened the whole thing.

One columnist suggested that the B.C. Federation of Sports should be a top candidate for the Farce of the Year Award.

This would be a shoo-in. No poll is needed.

AUSTIN, Tex. — A San Antonio businessman told a Texas house committee Tuesday the sex education films shown to students in public schools are "pornography — stuff that would go for a dollar shot in California." A Houston minister said sex education is part of a Communist conspiracy which he fought in Korea. But an Austin businessman, Fred Bell, said a bill to stop the teaching of sex education "is one of the worst things we could let happen to Texas education."

Bell was clearly among the minority of persons who appeared before the house public education committee on a bill to strip school boards of the power to require mandatory participation in sex education classes in public schools.

PARIS — Following his successful defense of the world heavyweight boxing crown Monday against Muhammad Ali, one of the first things Joe Frazier did was sign a new contract — to sing with The Knockouts. Loulou Gaste, manager of Line Renaud, director of the Hotel King Castel in Lake Tahoe, Calif., said Frazier signed a contract Tuesday to appear at the hotel March 25-27.

COVINA, Calif. — A municipal court judge has ruled that Moe, a 3-year-old, 38-pound chimpanzee, has a perfect right to live with his owners in the city of Covina. "After all," Judge Jack Alex said Tuesday, "we're all descendants of Moe's ancestors — and I must say his behavior is better than many people we see in this court." A city electrical inspector reported that Moe's owners, Mr. and Mrs. James Davis, were violating a city ordinance prohibiting harboring of an "animal not generally raised by man as a household pet or domesticated animal."

PARIS — Jean Jacques Servan-Schreiber, millionaire publisher and politician, told a news conference today he will ask the government to buy a nude bust of actress Brigitte Bardot as a symbol of France to be placed in each of the nation's 38,000 town halls.

CLEVELAND — Delores Thomas is no longer the city's "most wanted traffic violator." She paid $635 in fines for 81 outstanding parking tickets. The 22-year-old Miss Thomas, who said she knew of only 17 tickets, borrowed the money from her father. He had to cash his savings bonds. "I have only 17 tickets at home, so I don't know how they can say I have 81," she said. She decided to pay them anyway. Miss Thomas had headed the list of the city's 100 most wanted parking violators, made up of persons with 17 or more unpaid tickets. The list was drawn up by police last week in a crackdown on illegal parkers.

Communication Between Actors'

By CHERYL BORRIS

The 31st annual Greater Victoria Drama Festival continued Tuesday night at Mount Douglas Senior High School with three serious themes dealt with in three different manners.

Adjudicator Carl Hare, from the theatre department of the University of Victoria, explained that Riders to the Sea written by James Millington Synge portrayed man against nature; End of a Dream represented man against man; and Arthur Kopit's Chamber Music portrayed man fighting himself.

DEALING WITH PEOPLE
He said to the audience, "These plays are not dealing with gimmicks and stage techniques, they are dealing with people. It is the actor's responsibility to show us another human being rather than himself acting."

He explained that in Riders to the Sea, Synge has found the innermost spirit of the Aran Islanders, and has been able to communicate their strength and endurance in the face of the Atlantic Ocean, which every day is a matter of life and death to the people.

"Unfortunately, the actors are just beginning to get their lines," he commented, "and therefore, cannot yet fully explore characterizations and situations on stage. The characters are only half-formed right now, and they are not sure of the sequence in their stage movements."

Chamber Music, presented by Mount Douglas Senior High School, was described as a "bravura performance".

"We saw tremendous stage activity within the confines of this play," Hare commented. "The comic aspects were brilliant. Unfortunately, another level was lacking, and therefore we lost the play."

"It represents different ways of life — we have a group of women who are insane — they are not merely bizarre caricatures, but human beings. Each actress must get to the people behind the masks. The play represents a parody of global destruction, but we must realize that their world is also ours."

He commended Clarice Eyeford for her performance of Pearl White and Leslie Cox for her Gertrude Stein, saying, "this was a particularly human portrayal. I had the feeling that she was neurotic rather than psychotic. This was not a caricature."

He summed up, "The evening was uneven, but full of fine moments."

The festival continues tonight at Lansdowne Junior High School at 8.

SENSITIVE PERFORMANCE

"Kathleen, played by Maura Hall, gave a sensitive performance and portrayed a great sense of character; while Nora, played by Laurie Frederick, was a good contrast, showing her own sensitivity of life."

Hare went on to tell the Mount Douglas cast that it was almost impossible for students of their age to portray age — especially the particular kind of age that comes from emotion that has been drained from within. He praised Bev Sawyer for her fine attempt at a statement of grief in her performance of Maurya.

There was a nice sense of period in the setting and costumes.

Plastic Warship

SOUTHAMPTON, England — A minesweeper made of plastic reinforced with glass sels such as frigates using this will be launched soon in a material.

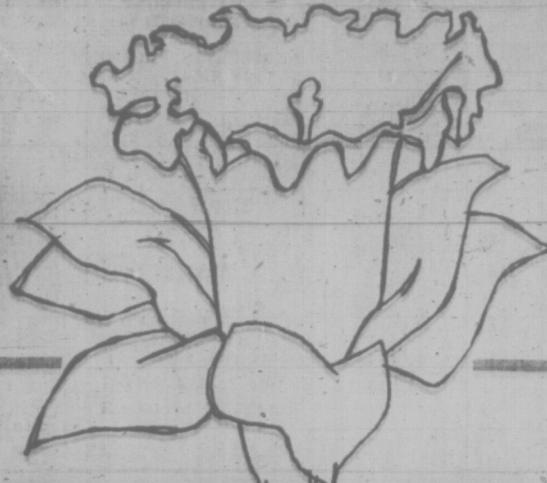

Plastic has previously been used in dinghies and small boats. It now is being heralded by the British defence ministry as "the next great structural engineering material."

The contract to build the 400-ton minesweeper, named William, was awarded Vosper Thornycroft 13 months ago.

Labor Law Overhaul Hikes Federal Minimum Wage

OTTAWA (CP) — A legislative overhaul of federal labor law began in the Commons Tuesday with first reading of a bill seeking to improve employment conditions for more than 500,000 Canadian workers.

Key features of the bill, to amend the Canada Labor Standards Code, include:

—An increase to $1.75 an hour from $1.65, effective July 1, in the federal minimum wage rate, with further increases to be at the discretion of the cabinet;

—Maternity leave of 17 weeks, more if the birth is delayed, with a guarantee for the mother that her job, or a similar job, will be open for her six weeks after delivery;

FIRST IN SERIES

—Advance notice of up to three months of mass layoffs and two weeks notice for individual workers if the employee has not himself given cause;

—A minimum of one week severance pay for workers laid off after five years with a firm.

The bill is the first in a series of legislative reforms being prepared by Labor Minister Bryce Mackay. Notice has already been given of a second bill to revamp Canada's unemployment insurance system, which Mr. Mackay is expected to introduce today.

The minister suggested in an interview Tuesday that the long-awaited amendments to the Industrial Relations Disputes Investigation Act may come down within month. He told the Commons the cabinet has still to pass on his proposed reforms of the Fair Employment Practices Act.

The amendments to the Labor Standards Code incorporate some of the principal findings and recommendations of the royal commission on the status of women.

The bill repeals the Female Employees Equal Pay Act, criticized by the commission as ineffectual, and puts the onus on the government to ensure that women workers receive as much as men for doing the same or similar work. Under the present system, Mr. Mackay agreed, women fear reprisals if they stand up for their rights.

PROVIDES PROTECTION

Penalties for a conviction under the amendments include fines of up to $1,000 or one year in jail.

The bill also would provide protection against dismissal for employees whose wages have been or are about to be garnished.

Other measures would modify provisions in the existing code:

—Employees would be able to claim two weeks of paid vacation during their first year of employment rather than at the end.

Those leaving their jobs would be entitled to unclaimed vacation pay at a rate of four per cent of their basic pay.

—A holiday pay would be provided on the working day immediately before or after New Year's Day, Christmas Day, Dominion Day or Remembrance Day if they fall on a Sunday or a Saturday normally a non-working day.

DIRECT EFFECT LIMITED

—The labor minister would be able to set regulations to exempt certain businesses or classes of workers from the present code's provision for a maximum 48-hour work week.

The amendments probably will be discussed at a meeting in April by the federal minister with his provincial counterparts.

The requirement for advance notice of layoffs, Mr. Mackay added, will enable both speedier service from the unemployment insurance commission and more effective use of the manpower department's resources for finding new jobs or arranging re-training.

Boat Capsizes, 10 Seamen Lost

JUNEAU, Alaska (AP) — The U.S. Coast Guard said today a 90-ton Japanese fishing vessel capsized and sank Monday north of Unalaska in the Aleutian chain, and 10 seamen are missing.

The Coast Guard said it was advised of the situation Wednesday by the Japanese Maritime Safety Agency.

A spokesman said eight members of the 18-man crew of the fishing vessel Nissei Maru were rescued by other ships of the fleet. He said 18 ships were continuing a search.

Divcon

Agreement in principle has been made to acquire Divcon Inc., of Houston, reports Oceanering International Inc., of Santa Barbara.

Divcon, an International Utilities Corp. subsidiary, services construction and the oil industry with offshore engineering, divers and equipment, operating in 14 nations.

More than $3 million worth of advanced diving equipment was included in the transaction.

Bowater

Despite increased sales, group profits before tax of the Bowater Paper Corp. Ltd. declined by about 17 per cent in 1970 to $38 million.

The corporation partly blamed a severe drop in Canadian profits through dollar exchange, and losses by its now-sold French subsidiary.

Newspaper production in the corporation's British mills will be reduced.

Total group sales in 1970 rose to $785.5 million. Consolidated profit after tax declined to $20 million from $25 million in 1969.

Husky Oil

Husky Oil Ltd. had a 12 per cent gain in gross revenue during 1970 while net earnings from operations declined by the same percentage.

Operating revenues totalled $182.9 million and income from operations $6.97 million or 67 cents a share. The earnings were reduced by $1.7 million from a loss on the sale of offshore contract drilling operations and the per-share net income was 49 cents for 1970.

In 1969, Husky had gross revenue of $163.49 million and profit of $7.86 million or 76 cents a share.

Canadian Pacific

A $10.1 million drop in net earnings is reported by Canadian Pacific and its subsidiaries for 1970, although railway income was 11 per cent higher before fixed charges, based on 6 per cent higher revenue to a record $616 million.

Net income was $65.7 million ($4.35 a share) vs. $75.8 million ($5.05) in 1969. Net from rail and miscellaneous sources amounted to $28.7 million ($1.77 a share), down from $31.4 million ($1.96) the year before.

Rail alone netted $38.4 million, up $3.8 million and earnings from CP Telecommunications and CP Bermuda Ltd. also showed marked improvement.

Freight revenue rose 8 per cent with gains in shipment of grain, coal, potash, LP gas, newspapers and papers.

Higher costs, including CP Air, forced profit down.

Foreign Trade Policy Scored

OTTAWA (CP) — Canada is essentially of sound commercial relations with the United States.

He condemned tendencies to erect political and "emotional" barriers to improved Canada-U.S. trade. If Canada is economically strong, it has a better chance of preserving its independence, he maintained.

He told the Commons external affairs committee that with the expected expansion of the European Economic Community, Canada, with no common market affiliations, would be the only industrialized country in the world without a protected market of at least 100 million people.

Developments in Europe can harm Canada's existing foreign trade, not just prevent it from expanding, he said.

Yet the pulp and paper industry was thus far the only Canadian industry to send representatives to Brussels and London to study problems associated with enlargement of the community and to declare its interest in continued trade ties.

This lack of effort was a "real charge" against Canadian industry.

The pulp and paper industry, traditionally Canada's biggest exporter in terms of dollar value, last year exported 14.5 million tons of a total production of 18.6 million tons.

Fowler said there is no conceivable political obstacle, from the European side, to Britain's entry into the Common Market.

He envisaged the possibility that western and eastern Europe eventually will come together in one huge trading bloc.

Where does this leave Canada? Unless we are careful we will become, among industrial nations, the outer one."

Fowler said Canada, as the country most vulnerable to present trends, should seek opportunities for new initiatives in world trade.

At the same time, he criticized the government's foreign policy while paper for its "failure to recognize the

PIANO FIRM WILL END OPERATIONS

TORONTO (CP) — Canada's oldest piano makers, Mason and Risch Ltd., announced that they will go out of business within three months because of failing sales caused by competition from Japanese imports.

The company said sales and other revenue amounted to $89.36 million down from $93 million last year but higher than the 10-year average of $87.8 million.

President Richard I. Nelson said he expected lower earnings in 1971, although forecasting was difficult "because of the impossibility of predicting fish landings with any degree of accuracy."

The company shut down for three months last year and reopened after the employees agreed to take a temporary wage cut.

Alaska Retaliates for Oil Tanker Protests

JUNEAU, Alaska (AP) — A bill calling for a federal study of safeguards needed to protect Alaskan waters and lands from damage by Canadian commodities being shipped over them was introduced in the Alaska house Tuesday.

In Ottawa today, Esquimalt-Saanich MP David Anderson called the move an effort to retaliate against Canadian objections to the Alaska-Cherry Point oil tanker proposal but added he was pleased that Alaska is aware that oil pollution is a serious hazard. (See page 2)

THREE SOLDIERS DEAD IN BELFAST

BELFAST (AP) — The British army announced that three of its soldiers were shot dead tonight on the outskirts of this Northern Irish city.

Ligoniel, at the top end of the embattled Crumlin Road, is neutral territory in Northern Ireland's sectarian strife. It is neither predominantly Protestant nor Roman Catholic.

Police declined official comment on widespread suggestions that the three victims died in a new wave of killings brought on by a split in the Irish Republican Army.

But unofficial sources said there was every sign that the men, all aged between 18 and 20, were assassinated. They died near a saloon on the road from Belfast to the city airport.

B.C. Education A Rudderless Ship—Socred

By BRUCE YEMEN and PETER McNELLY

MLAs from all parties expressed disappointment in the legislature Tuesday at the reluctance of Education Minister Donald Brothers to engage them in a debate on education philosophy.

Robert Wenman (SC-Delta) joined opposition MLAs in pressing Brothers for a statement about the aims of the education system in B.C.

Wenman described B.C.'s education system as "a rudderless ship" and added:

"Somehow, somewhere, take the rudder of that ship before it sinks in chaos," he said.

No-Philosophy Philosophy?

"I wonder who is the educational leader in this province?" he said, adding: "I know the minister is in charge of administration . . ."

Wenman said the minister should say whether the government has a "no-philosophy philosophy" in which the "grass-roots" are left to decide the goals.

"Personally I don't think that is adequate in today's society," he said.

"We have to somehow prepare our young people to survive in the society that we have created," he said.

Withstood 'Three-Year Assault'

"It's a credit to the public school system we have that it has been able to withstand the assault of this minister for the past three years," Williams said.

On another issue, Brothers

I s'pose it figures when t' Aussie prime minister votes himself out—ever'thing's upside down there.

Aleskans don't want Canadian ships spillin' oil on th' coast. That's one thing we kin agree on.

Mister Benson sez his tax legislation will be changed when we git it. Our incomes will be changed AFTER we git it.

The resolution, by Rep. Red Swanson (D—Nenana), states that "in recent days various members of the Canadian Parliament have issued statements of protest regarding the transport of Alaskan oil via tanker from Valdez to the Puget Sound area."

It adds that "Canada itself, each and every month, has at least six carriers plying the inside passage to Skagway, all of which carry oil and oil products."

Canadians are currently shipping on a regular basis oil by tanker cars on the White Pass and Yukon Railroad and also by pipeline out of Skagway," the bill said.

The resolution states that "some of the Canadian ships currently in service from Vancouver to Skagway are some of the oldest ships still used on a regular basis," and "if an accident should occur for whatever reason, Alaskan waters . . . would be in grave danger of being contaminated or destroyed by oil or ore cargoes."

The resolution calls for the federal government to begin a study of safeguards needed to protect Alaskan waters and land "from damage that could result from our current stance of letting the Canadians transport oil and ore over our land and through our water and to make recommendations as to an action that may be necessary to ensure our waters and land are safe from pollution of every sort."

UNHAPPY NOTE for three highly-skilled employees of Mason and Risch Ltd., Canada's oldest piano factory, is the news that the Toronto factory, now U.S.-owned, will be closed down in three months. Because of the highly-specialized nature of their jobs workers are encountering great difficulty in finding new employment. See story on Page 13.

Tax Paper Sting Pulled—Benson

Times Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA — Finance Minister Edgar Benson Tuesday night tried to placate an intensifying last-ditch effort by taxation white paper critics.

He departed from his text during a speech to the Kingston Junior Chamber of Commerce to assure his audience that the bill he puts to Parliament will not be an exact copy of the white paper.

He said it will have a "broader appeal" than has been apparent from the violent reaction of the business community and he suggested critics may be mollified when they see the legislation.

Benson said the bill will be introduced "sometime this spring, probably by the end of April."

The ad lib remarks inserted into a speech on inflation patterns, was seen as an effort to stem a sudden resurgence of lobbying against the white paper reforms.

For instance, last week the Canadian Petroleum Association made "a further and final submission" to Benson concentrating its fire against the cutback in depletion trade-offs proposed by the tax reform paper.

DOZEN NEW CHARGES READ AGAINST AUTHOR

MONTREAL (CP) — New charges of sedition conspiracy were laid today against three Quebecers arrested under the War Measures Act.

But one of the three—author Pierre Vallières—had a dozen charges, including the counselling of four murders, read out against him.

Teacher Charles Gagnon and Jacques Larue-Langlois, a broadcasting producer, were charged only with sedition conspiracy.

PARTY REVOLTS AGAINST PM

Gorton Votes Himself Out

"slightly arrogant, impulsive one-man-band style of leadership." (Background stories, Page 35.)

The crisis came to a head after former defence minister Malcolm Fraser quit his post Monday in a row with Gorton over Vietnam policy and the handling of his army generals.

Gorton was sworn in as defence minister today, replacing Fraser.

McMahon said he would consult with Industry Minister Douglas Anthony, leader of the Country party about forming a new coalition cabinet.

McMahon said he planned major changes in policy for Australia. In particular, he said, he will review the policies on the economy, tariffs and trade and the financial relationships between the Australian states and the federal government.

McMahon was reminded of the traditional antipathy between himself and Gorton, who was elected deputy leader of the party at the meeting that saw him ousted as leader.

Battle Looms On Pipeline

By DAVE MCINTOSH

OTTAWA (CP) — Is another great pipeline debate in the making?

A lot of people on Parliament Hill say they think so.

Many of the ingredients that were present in the epic parliamentary pipeline clash of 1956 are visible now, they say: such as American ownership.

CHRETIEN
welcomes pipeline

Danger to the Environment

And there is the rich new political whirlwind the next year and Conservative John Diefenbaker became prime minister.

It all could add up to the greatest confrontation since 1956 when the then Liberal government used closure to push through legislation providing a federal loan to American financiers—Texas buccaneers. The Opposition called them to complete a pipeline across Northern Ontario.

The Liberals reaped the political whirlwind the next year and Conservative John Diefenbaker became prime minister.

The current situation is that the federal government has made a proposal—Prime Minister Trudeau's word—that United States interests move their oil from the North Slope of Alaska to mid-continent by using a route down the Mackenzie River Valley in the Northwest Territories.

The Liberals reaped the

Pipeline Corridor Possible

Northern Development Minister Jean Chretien said in a speech at Dallas, Tex., Tuesday that Canada welcomes foreign capital for further economic development.

Mr. Chretien told the Commons Friday it would be possible to establish a pipeline corridor through the Arctic without hurting the interests of the Indians and Eskimos.

It is taken for granted here that the major part of the estimated $1.5 billion required for a Mackenzie Valley pipeline would come from the U.S.

This raises again the issue of American ownership and control, on which the cabinet has not yet formed an announced policy.

There is also the environmental issue on which the government has expressed strong views—but in relation to oil spills at sea and not into the land or rivers.

Canada and the U.S. are soon to hold formal discussions on a proposal by U.S. oilmen to move oil across Alaska by pipeline from the North Slope and then by giant tanker to Bellingham, Wash.

External Affairs Minister Mitchell Sharp has said sea shipments pose "great risks

Labor Mounts Attack

The B.C. Federation of Labor has called a special closed convention in Vancouver March 26 "in preparation for a possible all-out attack by the government against the labor movement."

The decision became known today as affiliated unions representing 146,000 workers received a call to attend the special convention.

"With the recent moves by the government ordering the Teamsters Union back to work and in proposing legislation that will take away the teachers union shop provision, it was the feeling of the federation executive that we must convene this convention in preparation for a possible all-out attack by the government against the labor movement," federation secretary Ray Haynes said in a letter to unions.

The federation executive sees both of these moves as a serious threat to the entire labor movement and urges all affiliates to ensure that they have maximum representation at this special convention.

Hanoi War Supplies

Boosted by China

HONG KONG (Reuter) — China will increase its military and economic assistance to North Vietnam, aid which already has reached huge proportions, it was revealed today.

The disclosures, along with statements by leaders of the two countries issued by the North Vietnam news agency today, indicated that China is not now contemplating direct military intervention in Indochina but will step up the flow of arms and supplies to Hanoi.

China signed a supplementary aid agreement with North Vietnam last month, but its details were not revealed.

The promise of more aid, made by Chinese Premier Chou En-lai during his four-day visit to Hanoi, was contained in a joint communiqué signed at the end of the trip.

IMPORTANT DOCUMENT

Chou, who described the communiqué as an important document, said China would work hard to fulfill the various tasks involved in fighting the United States in Indochina.
